"There are nine K-State student firefighters that work full time in the summers and part time in the school year," he said. "They work up to 950 hours over the year."

Professor promotes poetry

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN
Jonathan Holden, distinguished university professor in English and poet in residence, reads a poem from one of the books he has published. Holden was named Kansas' first poet laureate in December 2004.

Light pours into the warm office and onto the pages of an open book. Two fingers softly follow the words of the well-worn book, and a deep, calm voice rocks every uncertainty from the mind.

Pulling his glasses from his nose, Jonathan Holden quotes a poem, "Integrals" he wrote when he was teaching math.

"Erect, arched in disdain, the integrals drift from left across white windless pages to the right, serene as swans..."

Holden, distinguished professor in English and poet in residence, was named Kansas' first poet laureate in December 2004. This honor includes creating events that promote reading and writing poetry.

"To have people know who you are and honor it – it's fun to win a lot of awards – I've won a lot of awards," Holden said.

But Holden shook his head when talking about his success.

"I come up here every day, and I feel very lucky," Holden said. "I don't take this for granted, by the way."

Holden was nominated to be the state's poet laureate by colleague Gerald Reeck. Reeck, professor of biochemistry, said he met Holden when the two began playing tennis together, but the two became fast friends through poetry.

Reeck said that Holden's passion for poetry and language have affected his teaching.

"What I think is wonderful about Jonathan's teaching is that he has the innate ability in him to praise a person's work while at the same time criticizing it," Reeck said. "I've never seem him be harsh with a student."

Linda Brigham, head of the department of English, said students find Holden an example of what it takes to be a poet.

"He's so successful with the students, many using the term 'inspiration,' because he thinks of poetry as an art," Brigham said.

Brigham said Holden's love for language translates into all aspects of his life.

"One of the things that might characterize our interaction is the interplay of word games we have over the Xerox machine. Whatever it is, it's still centered around language," she said.

As for inspiration, Holden said the lightning bolt sometimes strikes, but life experiences and a hunger for reading play a major part in his work.

"It's all about reading," Holden said. "I was always raised to be a reader. Reading and writing are basically the same thing."

For those aspiring to succeed in poetry, Holden said the road can be hard and competitive.

"My father famously said, 'Many are called, but few are chosen,'" he said. "You have to be fairly obsessive."

As one of the chosen, Holden has won a number of awards, including prizes ranging up to $20,000. His poetry collection, "The Sublime," was chosen by Pulitzer Prize-winning poet Yusef Komunyakaa for the Vassar Miller Prize in 1995. Holden has also published 17 books and more than 190 poems.

But nothing but gratitude is offered from Holden's lips.

"All I can say to everything around me is 'Thank you, thank you, thank you,'" Holden said. "The luck - it boggles my mind."

Bill would reduce time to get visas

By Maria Nilges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new legislation calls for improvements in visa processing, seeking to reverse the decline in the number of international students studying at American colleges and universities.

This effort seeks to reduce the time it takes international students to get a visa from months to weeks.

The bill called ACTION Act of 2005 was introduced by Senators Norm Coleman R-Minn., and Jeff Bingaman D-N.M. on Feb. 17.

According the Web site www.unitedstatesvisas.gov, about 600,000 foreigners study in the United States each year. However, international graduate student applications fell 32 percent last year.

Donna J. Davis, director of the international student center at K-State, said their program has also experienced this decline.

"There has been a big drop in applications this spring, and this is not due to anything K-State is doing wrong," she said. "The drop is due to all the hurdles that the U.S. government has put in place for international students."

One hurdle in the visa application process is that students have to prove that they have ties to their home country and will return once they have completed their studies. The new bill hopes to reduce this part of the application.

Susheel Indrabal, graduate student in computer information systems, came to K-State from India in August 2004 to get his master's degree. He said his visa application process took about a month, and there was much emphasis on ensuring he would return to India.

"I had to prove that I owned property and give my bank account balance as kinds of proof that I had ties in India and would return," he said.

Davis said she hopes the bill will show international students that the United States welcomes and encourages their presence.

"Right now, the U.S. is not portrayed as a nation that is open and welcome to international student exchange," she said. "I am hopeful that the legislation will change this view, but even so, the effects will not be seen immediately."

Visas don't permit entry to the United States.

A visa simply indicates that the traveler's application has been reviewed by U.S. embassy and that the embassy has determined that person is eligible to enter the United States for a specific purpose.

Families of BTK victims urged to avoid news media

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Sedgwick County district attorney's office has urged the families of BTK victims not to talk to the media, citing concern that such interviews might affect the case against a suspect in the serial killings.

District Attorney Nola Foulston sent an e-mail Friday to several news outlets, saying family members asked not to be contacted by the media.

"Any requests should be directed through me in the District Attorney's office," Foulston said in the e-mail.

But family members of alleged victims Marine Hedge, Kathryn Bright and Vicki Wegerle said they had been contacted by the district attorney's office and urged not to give interviews.

Georgia Cole, spokeswoman for Foulston, said family members had not been ordered to decline interview requests.

"We just told them the repercussions of what might happen" if they did, Cole said.

In other developments, the Wichita Eagle, citing independent sources, reported in Saturday's editions that Dennis L. Rader, who has been charged with 10 murders linked to BTK, has confessed to all 10 killings.

The AP and other media have reported that Rader confessed to six to 10 murders.

Reno County Sheriff Randy Henderson said Friday that authorities are revisiting the unsolved 1977 murder of Gail Sorenson, 23, of Hutchinson, Kan., to see if it might be connected to BTK.

Henderson said he has not yet received word from the Kansas Bureau of Investigation about whether DNA links Rader to Sorenson's murder.

Sorenson, 23, was reported missing on Feb. 11, 1977 – the same year that alleged BTK victims Shirley Vian and Nancy Fox were killed.

Her body was found two days later just south of Hutchinson along the banks of the Arkansas River.

Henderson said the circumstances are similar to how Park City, Kan., residents Marine Hedge and Dolores Davis were killed and left in a rural area.

"That fits our scenario – also the viciousness of the crime and the close proximity to Wichita," Henderson said. "I think we're derelict if we don't look at it."

Sorenson's husband, Larry, told The Hutchinson News Friday that he hoped authorities would prove BTK killed Gail. But he said he had some doubts because of evidence that police have discussed.

School funding plans inadequate

By John Hanna
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Both legislative chambers have approved plans to increase education spending, but Gov. Kathleen Sebelius said Friday their actions represent only "a baby step" because both plans cover only one year and provide no new revenues.

Some school superintendents also are displeased, viewing both the $113 million House plan and the Senate's $145 million alternative as inadequate.

But House Speaker Doug Mays, R-Topeka, said legislators can adopt a plan that satisfies the Kansas Supreme Court without increasing taxes, a goal of GOP leaders.

Both proposals would tap existing revenues and cash reserves to finance the new spending for the fiscal year beginning July 1.

The House approved its plan Friday on a 78-44 vote. Senators approved their proposal Thursday, 29-10. The final version of an education funding bill will be drafted by negotiators.

"We don't have a multiyear plan. We don't have funding," Sebelius said before the House vote. "I think the fact that there are two plans out on the table is a step – it's a baby step."

Neither plan impressed Baldwin Superintendent James White, who called them "ludicrous, laughable, comical, farcical and ridiculous."

The Supreme Court has given legislators until April 12 to increase annual aid to schools beyond the current $2.7 billion and distribute the dollars more fairly.

Both chambers' measures increase spending on special education, bilingual education and programs for at-risk children, all concerns cited by the Supreme Court in a January ruling.

Both plans also increase general aid to all districts.

One provision in the House proposal requires the state's base aid per pupil, now set at $3,863, to increase by the rate of inflation each year.

Another would give public schools first claim to state dollars, meaning other programs would be shorted.

Syrian troops set to leave Lebanon

By Bassem Mroue
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Syrian troops will begin pulling back to the Lebanese border following a meeting of the leadership, Lebanon's defense minister said Sunday.

A day earlier, Syrian President Bashar Assad announced a two-stage pullback of his forces to the Lebanese border, but he failed to address broad international demands that he completely withdraw the 15,000 troops after nearly 30 years in Lebanon.

Assad also did not respond to President Bush's demand on Friday that Syria withdraw all its troops from Lebanon before its parliamentary elections in May.

In Beirut, Lebanese Defense Minister Abdul-Rahim Murad said Syrian troops would pull back from Mount Lebanon and northern Lebanon toward the eastern Bekaa Valley closer to the Lebanon-Syria border.

"The Syrian withdrawal will begin Monday directly after the meeting in Damascus of the Syrian and Lebanese leaderships," Murad said.

Assad and Lebanese President Emile Lahoud were to meet with other officials to discuss the details of the pullback.

The first stage of the pullback would take place over the course of two or three days, Murad said.

Assad was vague about the pullback, leaving it unclear if Syrian forces would eventually leave Lebanon or remain inside the country near the Syrian frontier.

But he said his plan would put Syria in full compliance with international agreements.

"By carrying out this measure, Syria will have fulfilled requirements of the Taif agreement and implemented U.N. Resolution 1559," the Syrian leader said in a rare address to parliament.

Later Saturday, Syrian Immigrant Affairs Minister Buthaina Shaaban indicated troops would withdraw to within their borders.

"The matter is very clear. When an army withdraws, it withdraws to inside the country's border," he said.

The United States issued a strong statement of dissatisfaction with Assad's most recent comments, which came after four weeks of political turmoil in Lebanon set off by the assassination of a former prime minister.

"As President Bush said Friday, when the United States and France say withdraw, we mean complete withdrawal – no halfhearted measures," the statement said.

The Sisters of St. Joseph of Wichita

Talk about a radical way to live.

Imagine a life totally devoted to Christ. A life where the rewards you seek are not of this earth. Imagine shunning materialism, realizing there's so much more to life when you follow in the footsteps of Jesus.

We are the sisters of St. Joseph. And it's true, our lives are radically different from the world around us. For ours is a community of vowed women committed to prayer, spiritual growth, and serving others.

We invite you to deepen your relationship with Jesus Christ and join us on our journey.

You may not be entirely certain. And with the many distractions in today's world, it's easy to get sidetracked. But if you listen to your inner voice — if you listen to your heart — you just might find that devoting your life to God as a Sister is the radical way you are being called to live.

Get this free CD-ROM from the Sisters of St. Joseph to help you find out if you've truly been called. To request your CD, call Sister Karen Salsbery, Vocation Minister, or visit us online.

United Iraqi Alliance to convene for 1st democratic parliament

By Patrick Quinn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Iraqi politicians set March 16 for the opening of the country's first democratically elected parliament in modern history as a deal hardened Sunday to name Jalal Talabani, a leader of the minority Kurds, to the presidency.

The more powerful prime minister's job will go to Ibrahim al-Jaafari, a deeply conservative Shiite who leads the Islamic Dawa party.

His nomination, which the Kurds have agreed to, has been endorsed by the most powerful Shiite cleric in Iraq – Grand Ayatollah Ali al-Sistani.

"This was one of our firm demands, and we agreed on it previously. The agreement states that Jalal Talabani takes the presidential post and one of the United Iraqi Alliance members takes the prime minister's post," Talabani spokesman Azad Jundiyan told The Associated Press.

He added, however, that the clergy-backed United Iraqi Alliance also reached a preliminary agreement with the Kurds on their other conditions – including extending their territories to include Kirkuk.

Jundiyan said they wanted the deal on paper before going though with it, while alliance officials, including Ahmad Chalabi, said those negotiations were not over.

Baghdad's new Shiite governor, Ali Fadhil al-Imseer, took office Sunday to become the city's first democratically elected municipal official since the fall of Saddam Hussein. Provincial and municipal elections were held alongside national ones on Jan. 30.

In Mosul, 225 miles north of Baghdad, gunmen killed a prominent Sunni Arab politician. Hana Abdul Qader, a lawyer and former member of Mosul's previous city council, was shot while leaving her home, said Noor Al-Din Saied, spokesman for the Iraqi Islamic party in Mosul.

U.S. soldiers assigned to the 1st Marine Expeditionary Force and Iraqi forces arrested more than 60 suspected insurgents in the city of Haswa, 31 miles south of Baghdad, on Saturday, the U.S. military said Sunday.

State-run Al-Iraqiya television also reported that Barham Saleh, a Kurd who is deputy prime minister for national security affairs, confirmed that the 275-seat National Assembly elected in January would convene March 16.

That is the anniversary of the 1988 Saddam-ordered chemical attack on the northern Kurdish town of Halabja, which killed 5,000 people. Saleh met with alliance leader Abdel Aziz al-Hakim on Saturday when the alliance convened to discuss the issue.

"The United Iraqi Alliance proposed to convene on March 15, but we proposed the 16th, the anniversary of Halabja massacre when Saddam ordered his army in 1988 to kill Kurds with chemical weapons.

On this day we want to denounce this massacre as we establish a new democratic parliament," Jundiyan said.

Al-Jaafari and the alliance agreed on Talabani's presidency during a March 3 meeting with Kurdish leaders in northern Irbil. Kurds had long wanted the job for Talabani, the leader of the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan.

The alliance, which won 140 seats in the assembly, needs the 75 seats held by a Kurdish coalition to gain the two-thirds majority needed to elect a president and two vice presidents, the first step toward setting up a government under a prime minister.

Interim Prime Minister Ayad Allawi, who controls 40 seats in the assembly, also has been negotiating to keep his job.

Israel, Palestinians resume discussions

By Mark Lavie
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Israel will hand over the West Bank town of Tulkarem to Palestinian control this week, a senior Palestinian commander said Sunday, marking the resumption of confidence-building measures halted after a suicide bombing killed five Israelis in Tel Aviv.

Israeli and Palestinian commanders met Sunday for the first time since the Feb. 25 bombing – attributed to the Islamic Jihad – that led Israel to freeze the handover of five towns and release of 400 more prisoners. That agreement was reached last month when Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon and Palestinian leader Mahmoud Abbas declared a truce to end four years of bloodshed.

Before the bombing, the idea was to begin with Jericho, an isolated town in the Jordan River valley, but the two sides failed to agree on how much territory would be involved. Tulkarem is adjacent to the northern section of the line between Israel and the West Bank.

The senior Palestinian participant in the Sunday talks, West Bank commander Hajj Ismail Jabber, told the Associated Press, "it was agreed in principle that the Israeli army will begin Tuesday withdrawing from Tulkarem and the areas around the town, and afterward we will discuss the Israeli withdrawal from the other towns in the West Bank."

student qualifies for Pell Grants.

Moeder said the item in the formula that is off is the state tax amount. He said the percentage of income set aside for state taxes differs based on the home state of the student. For example, Kansas may set aside five percent of a family's income for state taxes, while Colorado may only set aside four percent for state taxes. Thus, students from Kansas have more of a chance to qualify for Pell Grant money because they must pay more in taxes. The Bush administration wants to regulate the state tax tables to make it possible for more students in need of federal money to go to college, he said.

The revision is minor, but it's enough to bump up the income level for many families, Moeder said.

"It bumps out those students who are on the lower edge of the Pell Grant range," Moeder said.

However, Moeder said he does not expect the revision to affect too many K-State students who receive Pell Grants each year.

"It's hard to do any real analysis," Moeder said. "We'd have to basically recalculate everyone's eligibility to see who would qualify."

The Pell Grant ranges from $400 to $4,050 annually. Pell Grants are grants that do not have to be paid back to the government, and they are only available to undergraduate students without, college degree, Moeder said.

"I never got Pell Grants until I turned 23 and didn't have to claim my parents' income," Mike Evans, senior in biological and agricultural engineering, said. "It's the advantage of being a career student."

Evans said he's happy Pell Grant money is going up, because it costs more to get a post-secondary education.

"If the cost of school rises, then financial aid should rise, too," Evans said.

Many students rely only on themselves to pay for college, and they get government help because they don't make enough money.

"I come from a single-parent family and my mother is disabled, so I don't get any money from her," said John Caton, junior in psychology, anthropology and criminology.

Moeder also said the Pell Grant doesn't change based on where a student goes to school. He said going to a private school won't increase the Pell Grant money.

"Once you're eligible for Pell Grants, you're pretty much eligible anywhere you go to college," Moeder said.

raising. This year alone, K-State raised $100,000 for St. Jude, which equals the amount the students raised during the first year.

"We were the first program ever to raise $100,000 and we did that our first year, we raised that bar and other colleges rose to that level," Patrick said. "This encourages competition for next year and raises more money for the hospital."

Since the program has been at K-State, it has raised $350,000.

Brian Casad, sophomore in kinesiology, said raising money is what the whole program is about. The celebration was just a side note.

"It's all about the kids," Casad said. "The money helps the research and get better cures for cancer."

Malina Blake, junior in biology, said she was glad to help because it gives families of sick children money so they don't have to worry so much about paying for the treatment of their children.

Patrick said Up 'til Dawn has been the most beneficial thing he's done since he has been at K-State.

"I've learned so many things from it in so many ways," he said. "I got to help out with an amazing cause that I really believe in."

Jost said he has seen what the Up 'til Dawn program does for children who are at St. Jude.

"Every time I go back, I see younger kids who have just been diagnosed or whatever," he said. "If there wasn't money, then they wouldn't be helped a lot because their families don't have the money for it."

Nebraska leading scorer Joe McCray had with 14 points but was just 4-of-13 shooting.

The Wildcats also dominated Nebraska on the boards and at the free-throw line.

K-State out-rebounded the second-best rebounding team in the conference, 36-26, and hit 20-of-30 free throws to Nebraska's 9-of-17 effort.

"We got it where we wanted to get it," Wooldridge said. "I know the shooting percentage in the first half (36 percent) wasn't very good, but we kept going in, going in, going in. We won the paint game; we won the game in the lane, and because of that we were able to win."

Nebraska was within four points until Williams scored a bucket and was fouled at the 7:30 mark in the first half.

The Wildcats captured their third win in the past four games.

"We made some plays down the stretch and built that cushion far enough that maybe our fans could enjoy that win a little bit more," Wooldridge said. "And our players could, and our coaches did. It was a great way to finish the regular season."

Burns, Groene

Presidential pair promises to address issues, represent students' concerns

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Roommates really do become good friends.

President and vice president candidates Michael Burns and Grant Groene roomed together their freshman year at K-State after working together during high school.

The two met at an FFA district officer's conference after a debate over how to promote agricultural education. They kept in contact, continued working together and then decided to room together.

"We've been best friends ever since then," Groene, senior in agronomy, said.

Burns, from Jetmore, Kan., and Groene, from Winfield, Kan., served as district officers together in high school and then as state officers for Kansas their first year as Wildcats.

As officers, they spoke to high school students about leadership, goal-setting and FFA involvement.

"I spoke to a lot of different individuals about leadership development, how to be involved in the organization (FFA)," Burns, senior in agricultural education, said. "We put on different conferences for a variety of individuals."

From there, their leadership pathways diverged.

Burns went on to be a College of Agriculture ambassador and to serve as the president of the Agriculture Education club his sophomore year. He then was elected a student senator for the College of Agriculture, a position he has held for the past two years.

This year, Burns served as the chair of the Privilege Fee Committee, which allocates $10.1 million per year to campus organizations.

"I led the committee of 13 to make good decisions about where fees are headed in the future," he said. "The position has allowed me to work with administration quite a bit."

After his term as an FFA state officer, Groene joined Delta Chi fraternity, where he served as the alumni relations and rush chairs and then as president. The latter included working closely with Interfraternity Council.

Following graduation, Burns would like to work for a senator or congressman and later as a university administrator.

Groene, however, has global goals.

"I want to go into plant genetics and plant breeding," he said. "I would like to work overseas in underdeveloped countries promoting sustainable agriculture."

The two decided to run for student body president and vice president because of what they want to do for K-State students.

"I really felt I could represent the students' wants and needs," Burns said. "I'm very committed to making things happen on their behalf."

Burns acknowledged the hard work the positions of student body president and vice president will take, but said he and Groene will not shy away from controversial issues.

"Grant and I are not afraid to bring up the issues K-State students care about," Burns said. "We will go to university administration to collect information and see if there's something we can change."

Those changes will be based on the duo's four-pillar platform of a contracted tuition rate, a restructured service fee, graduate teaching assistant workshops and online teacher evaluations.

With a formal endorsement from primary election opponents Bill Schmit and Jack Holtzen, Burns and Groene will continue to take their message to students until Tuesday and Wednesday's general election.

Moore, Wagner

Candidates aspire to lead by example, work with groups to accomplish change

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For Tyson Moore and Matt Wagner, holding the position of governmental relations chair for Student Governing Association was a stepping stone to running for student body president and vice president.

Moore served as governmental chair his first year in SGA, before being elected to his current position as Student Senate vice chair.

Wagner is the current governmental relations chair.

Moore said working so closely with the executive group of the SGA was what helped him to decide to run for student body president. The decision to run wasn't a sudden realization, but rather the culmination of watching how SGA works.

"I really got to know the process and got to know how much work it takes to be student body presidents," Moore said. "After finding all that information out, I truly feel I have what it takes to fulfill that position's responsibilities and do even more for K-State."

Though the pair went to high school together in El Dorado, Kan., it was in SGA that Moore saw Wagner's running mate potential.

Wagner said working in SGA with Moore showed him how similar the two were when it came to how they lead and how they react to others.

"I think that Tyson and I, we connect and know each other's leadership style, each other's speaking style, the way we handle situations, and we have the same views on the ways to better the student population as a whole," Wagner said.

When it comes to leadership styles, working together is a big thing for Moore.

"I really believe in the power of group work or teamwork," Moore said. "No one person can change the world. By working together with different individuals we can get a lot more accomplished than working alone."

Wagner said leading by example is how he describes his leadership style.

"If I ask others to do something, I would like to show them and assist them," Wagner said.

The two are also fraternity brothers through Delta Sigma Phi fraternity, as well as roommates. Wagner said he thinks having that kind of relationship outside of Student Senate will strengthen their bond as president and vice president.

"Not only do we see each other in the office, but we have time to discuss the matters on a more personal basis," Wagner said.

The two made the decision to run for president and vice president because they wanted to have a positive impact on the students of K-State.

"Being president allows that individual to interact with so many students on campus and it also allows you to help students with problems that they face on a day to day basis," Moore said.

Representing students was also a goal for the pair.

"I think it's a way I can express the interest of students to those making the policies and the decisions that affect students," Wagner said.

Addressing issues like tuition stabilization, campus parking, online teacher evaluations and graduate students health care, Moore and Wagner are setting out to ensure students get more from K-State.

VOTER'S GUIDE
Monday, March 7, 2005

Presidential platforms

Tyson Moore

What makes you the most qualified candidates?
Our experience in student government and other organizations will allow us to accomplish the goals we've set for next year.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
Students need more for their money. We will lobby for more services and options for K-State students.

What is another goal you have for your term?
Graduate student health insurance needs significantly improved. We will work with the Board of Regents to get this changed.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
The most important issue facing K-State students is tuition stabilization. Students need leaders that already work for more state revenue.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
We are committed to visiting at least two different students groups a week, as well as keeping our door open.

Platforms

Stabilized tuition: By working with university administration and the Kansas Board of Regents, tuition increases at K-State would stay below 10 percent for the next year.

Parking garage: In order to increase parking on campus, a garage would be constructed to add almost 1,000 parking stalls for K-State students. Before construction begins, students will formally vote on the issue to voice their desire, or lack thereof, for a garage.

Graduate student health insurance: Graduate students will be offered health insurance with better benefits and a lower cost than the current health care plan. Money for increased benefits would be budgeted for through university budget, not student fees.

Online teacher evaluations: Students would be able to rate, review and research K-State professors through Pick-A-Prof.com or an in-house system. Students can pick the professors that best fit with their learning styles.

Michael Burns

What makes you the most qualified candidates?
We have a strong commitment, work ethic and the variety of experiences needed to represent your voice this next year.

What is the most important goal you have for your term?
To implement in our term a contracted tuition rate, a restructured service fee, graduate teaching workshops and online teacher evaluations.

What is another goal you have for your term?
To ensure student voices are heard on issues ranging from the Center for Student Activities referendum to parking garages.

What is the most important issue facing K-State this year?
It's important that informed decisions are made on possible referendums for a Center for Students Activities or Recreation Complex expansion.

How will you ensure you are aware of student concerns?
We will remain active in organizations outside of SGA, allowing us to stay in touch with students and their concerns.

Platforms

Contracted tuition rate: Students would be locked into a per-credit-hour tuition rate when they enter K-State. The rate would be figured by averaging the current tuition rate with the projected rate for the time the student will graduate. The student would pay that rate for all semesters at K-State.

Restructured service fee: A 55 cent per-credit-hour fee would provide students with free transcripts during and after college, would give them free access to Career and Employment Services and would eliminate the $15 graduation fee.

Graduate teaching assistant workshops: Workshops held at the beginning of each semester for graduate teaching assistants would instruct them in preparing syllabi and exams, creating lesson plans and appealing to all students' learning styles.

Online teacher evaluations: Through the Wildcat Information Network, students would be able to evaluate their professors and view other students' evaluations. Students could use these to choose the professors and classes that best suit their needs.

Greeks fill most of Student Senate seats

By Zachary T. Eckels
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Out of the 47 seated undergraduate senators, at least 29 are greek.

The last non-greek Student Governing Association president was Jake Worcester in 2000, Elections Commissioner David McCandless said.

This comes to greeks holding roughly 62 percent of the Senate seats while only making up 18.17 percent of the K-State student population.

Although it may seem high, this percentage isn't unusual for college campuses with greek organizations, Bill Muir, assistant vice president of community relations, said.

"On college campuses where there are greek organizations, they compose only 20 to 25 percent of the total student populations, but studies show they're involved in 70 to 75 percent of leadership positions," he said.

Muir said the reason why greeks hold so many positions is because they are leaders.

"It's because greek organizations go out and recruit people who are going to be leaders in the first place," he said.

Student Body President Hayley Urkevich said networking within the greek systems might help get other greeks elected.

"There are some houses with really strong relationships that support one another," she said.

For non-greeks to win elections, they have to talk to as many people as possible, chalk the sidewalks and hang posters to get their ideas and names out to the people, Sarah Laib, Senate operations committee chair, said.

"I was a non-greek senator two years ago, and I just talked to people in classes and in my organizations," Laib, junior in speech, said. "I asked them to talk to people in the other organizations they were in."

McCandless said it was kind of inevitable to have a majority of greeks in SGA when they have such a strong voting bloc.

Michael Burns, top-finishing presidential candidate in the primary election, is also from the College of Agriculture and has a greek vice presidential candidate, McCandless said. Tyson Moore, like the past four presidents, is greek.

"It's kind of a controversial thing, and I know a lot of people know about this," he said. "(The greeks) have kind of a vested interest in keeping it this way."

Recent presidents majored in business, engineering

By Cynthia Hoffman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The recent trend of student body presidents and vice presidents majoring in business and engineering may or may not continue this year.

A trend that had existed of agricultural majors being elected could be restarted with Michael Burns and Grant Groene, both being from the College of Agriculture; or Tyson Moore and Matt Wagner could continue the current trend, being from the College of Engineering and the College of Business Administration.

Student Body President Hayley Urkevich and Vice President Erik Ankrom are both business majors.

Before that, former president and vice president John O'Hara and Travis Stryker were business and engineering majors. In 2002, Zac Cook and Todd Kohman had a similar situation, with Cook being an engineering major and Kohman a business major.

Kyle Barker and Brandon Kauffman in 2001 were the lone exceptions to the trend in the last five years, with both being from the College of Arts and Sciences.

Moore, presidential candidate and junior in information systems, said the combination of their majors is successful because they offer various views.

"We have a similar combination that seems to have worked well in the past," he said. "I'm a very logical, systematic thinker, and Matt offers a marketing business perspective."

Bill Muir, SGA faculty representative, said although the pattern of academic majors was similar in recent years, he didn't think the elections were based off of individual majors.

"I can identify similarities going through past records, but I don't think they play a substantial role," Muir said. "If you have a college that is active or large, you can get them to work for your campaign, but an individual from any college can be elected if they have the right support."

Burns and Groene are both majors in the College of Agriculture. Burns said both the business and engineering colleges have had very strong candidates in the past, and that's why they have been elected. He said there are more important issues to consider than just an academic major.

"It helps to know people within your own college, but it's more important that you take your message to everyone at KSU," Burns said. "Grant and I understand the importance of representing the student body, and I think we have a platform that appeals to everyone."

Urkevich said that majors were important in some cases. She said there were times in her office when a political science background would have been helpful in working with the state Legislature. Urkevich also said there were times her own major proved to be beneficial in her president position, but other majors could have similar characteristics.

"My classes have helped me develop time management, organization, leadership, and teamwork skills," she said. "But when it comes down to it, there are people in every single college who could have those leadership capabilities required for the position."

Some students may not base their votes strictly off majors, but some said that a candidate's major does play a part in their candidate selection. Bob Kohman, senior in agriculture education, said Burns' major had an effect on his vote.

"I voted for Burns because we share the same major, and that's how I got to know him," Kohman said. "I'm not saying I wouldn't vote for a candidate with a different major, but I think a candidate's major influences his connections with other people."

The last SGA president with an agriculture major held office five years ago in 2000, when Jake Worcester, an agriculture economics major, was elected. Before that, many College of Agriculture students assumed the student body president position. According to the Office of Student Activities and Services, there have been 10 presidents from the College of Agriculture in the past 20 years.

"In years past, we have had a strong tradition of providing a fair share of leadership all around campus, especially in the SGA president position," said Jackie McClaskey, assistant dean of the College of Agriculture. "It would be nice to see the tradition continued."

It's unclear whether the recent academic major trend will be broken or continued. Moore said when students vote on Tuesday or Wednesday, they should consider the candidate's major, but not let it be the only deciding factor.

"I think the past couple of years have been a proven testament of specific academic major successes," he said. "However, students should also consider the issues the candidates present and the experience they have."

Despite what majors prevail, Urkevich said that all SGA members' experiences and majors play an important role in the function of SGA.

"The biggest thing about Senate is that members can feed off of one another's knowledge," she said. "It's amazing to see SGA operate, because the combination of all majors proves beneficial to the whole group."

No candidates run for College of Veterinary Medicine

Busy schedules, lack of free time could be reasons for no applicants

By Amy Bolton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The College of Veterinary Medicine is unrepresented on the Student Senate. No one ran for the college's one Student Senate seat.

Elections Commissioner David McCandless said students in the college are probably too busy with all the demands of being a vet student to worry about running for a leadership role that comes with more time commitments.

"Speculation would be that the veterinary medicine people have a lot of demands on their hands," McCandless said.

In addition to classes, McCandless said veterinary medicine students have to work in a veterinarian's office.

"I would assume it's not a real big priority over there," he said.

Bill Muir, assistant vice president for community relations, said that by not having anyone run for Student Senate, the College of Veterinary Medicine is not getting to have a voice in what happens at K-State.

"They miss out on representing their school on the Senate," Muir said.

Muir said the Student Senate allocates student fees, which students in the College of Veterinary Medicine pay.

"It's sad because they're not being represented on Student Senate," he said.

The weekly meetings that take place on Thursday nights might be part of the reason no veterinary medicine students run for Student Senate, Muir said, because they stay so busy with other things.

"Historically, veterinary medicine is an extremely rigorous curriculum," Muir said.

He said that when no one runs for the Veterinary Medicine Student Senate Seat, it's up to the college's council to appoint someone to the spot but that they do not do so.

"They haven't found anyone who wants to do it," Muir said.

K-State, KU elections are different because of coalitions, money

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Besides voting for the winner, K-State and the University of Kansas student elections are very different.

Each have their own rules and regulations to abide by, said David McCandless, senior in political science and elections commissioner.

He said at K-State, each candidate must file for an office, attend a mandatory meeting, keep track of expenditures, turn in a report of expenditures and then run for office.

He said there are also rules on campaigning that includes locations of signs and other advertisements.

Knowing people and being connected is also very crucial, McCandless said.

"In our system, it is crucial to raise and spend money effectively," McCandless said. "It makes a big difference if you can manage your money or time.

"But the KU system is worse when it comes to expenditures. Everyone talks about how much people spend here running for office, but there you could easily double or triple that."

A main difference between the two schools, as far as structure is concerned, is that KU has pseudo-political parties, something that hasn't caught on here, McCandless said. He said most candidates at K-State prefer to run independently.

KU's elections are governed by a senate code that is amended each year, Lucas Thompson, KU elections committee chair, said. The code was amended Thursday.

"The code amending is open for public response," Thompson said. "Generally, it's the people running that come before the board and voice their opinions on the issues. It's a chance to make sure the code doesn't interfere with their campaigning."

Thompson said funding for elections at KU is more open than at K-State and each coalition has an option of a voluntary spending cap.

"Each candidate has to turn in an expense report at the end of the campaign and we check over it and make sure it is all correct," Thompson said. "It's fairly open and it doesn't really lead to much abuse, and each coalition is free to raise their own money."

KU has coalitions that form for candidates to run for office, Thompson said. They're independently run, but sometimes campus clubs and organizations will start a coalition. He said generally there are two to four coalitions, and this year there are three.

Candidates don't have to belong to a coalition to run, Thompson said.

Even though clubs like Young Democrats and College Republicans might start a coalition, it doesn't always reflect on national politics, he said.

"Every student has a right to start a coalition, but they must register first," Thompson said. "The candidates that are running for president and vice president generally lead the coalition, and then there is a slate of candidates affiliated with the coalition that run for Senate."

Not having a coalition system is part of what makes K-State politics great, said Eleri Griffin, senate chair and senior in family life and community service.

"It's one thing that makes the elections successful and worth being in, because everyone works well together as a team, and not separated by coalitions," Griffin said. "It's not as highly politicized with the parties. That makes it a lot more like a federal or state election, and not an 'I'm happy about this university' campaign."

Griffin said she wished more students were engaged in the election process at K-State.

"People who aren't engaged in it would find it funny because there's a lot of chalk and signs everywhere," Griffin said. "People who go through it really know the process, but most people don't."

Regulation changes increase efficiency

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After months of being debated, the newly-revamped Student Governing Association elections regulations got their first test drive during last week's primary elections.

Elections Commissioner David McCandless said the changes last year, especially those involving restrictions on campaigning, have worked well.

"Last year's election was kind of a free-for-all and pretty chaotic," McCandless said. "You're never going to write a perfect set of regulations, but I think we have a process that works relatively well, because we have a good set of regulations in place."

He said there will be small modifications here and there as problems arise, but for the most part, he said he is happy with the regulations as they are.

"It's a different problem every year, and that's kind of the nature of the game," McCandless said.

One problem that has already developed during this election season is the use of the Powercat symbol on campaign materials.

Former presidential candidate Andrew Treaster and his running mate Dave Hart, who finished third in last week's primaries, said he as well as candidates Michael Burns and Grant Groene used the logo in some of their materials.

Treaster said the logo had been used by candidates in the past.

"You're never going to write a perfect set of regulations, but I think we have a process that works relatively well, because we have a good set of regulations in place."

David McCandless
ELECTIONS COMMISSIONER

"We used the Powercat logo," Treaster said. "And Vice President John Fairman had a problem with that."

McCandless said since the problem, since the problem arose after the elections had already started–which he chalked up to a miscommunication–they will wait until after the election to address the issue in policy.

"That was something we didn't have much control over," he said. "K-State will no longer grant permission to use the copyright for any type of political campaign."

Groene said he and Burns have been very pleased with the cleanliness of the race so far and said they felt all candidates were working within the bounds of the regulations.

"I think the regulations they have in place are very fair and efficient," he said. "They are doing a very good job of enforcing them."

Tyson Moore, who, along with running mate Matt Wagner, finished second in last week's primaries, said the election went smoothly under the new regulations.

"Senate Ops (Operations) has been working on them for a solid seven months, and there were no problems," Moore said.

One problem he said he had noticed was some confusion among students and others not intimately involved with SGA regarding the procedure by which violations must be reported.

"Right now, it's a 24-hour deadline," Moore said. "If you see a violation, you have to turn in a report within 24 hours."

McCandless said the formal filing is crucial.

"Anybody who has any kind of experience with regulation and oversight knows that a paper trail is absolutely essential," he said. "That's kind of a protection for both sides involved, to make sure everything is above the table."

Former presidential candidate Bill Schmit said he and his running mate Jack Holtzen, who finished fourth in last week's primaries, said the elections regulations were not a problem for them.

"There's little stuff here and there that's a pain, but for the most part I thought we did pretty well with them," Schmit said.

Schmit said he thought the amount of sidewalk chalk has gotten out of hand.

McCandless said regulations on sidewalk chalking may be in the not-too-distant future as well.

Elected representatives responsible for policies, funding, student voice

Student Senate

Student Senate is the legislative body and voice for K-State students.

Senate consists of 60 representatives, and each senator represents each individual college.

Two faculty members also serve on Student Senate, while three students serve on Faculty Senate.

Standing committees are also a part of Student Senate. Committees include the Operations Committee, which tallies senator absences and makes sure Senate runs smoothly; the Academic Affairs and University Relations Committee, which deals with issues pertaining to student life, student representation and services; the Governmental Relations Committee, which lobbies state and local governments to address student concerns; and the Privilege Fee Committee, which is responsible for evaluating the allocation of student fees.

The Privilege Fee Committee allocates funds to groups and services such as Lafene Student Health Center and the Recreation Complex through privilege fees.

Senators write legislation, looks over recommendations and maintain contact with the Kansas Board of Regents.

Senators also enact policies for the student body, college councils and Student Senate committees.

Colleges councils

Each college has a council with its own set of rules. There are about 10 to 16 students on a council. Councils work with Student Senate to fill open senate positions, determine funding and change constitutions.

Board of Student Publications

The Board of Directors of Student Publications Inc., oversees the business of all student publications. The Board hires editors in chief for the Collegian and the Royal Purple. It also hires the advertising sales manager for both publications on a semester basis.

The board is not allowed to direct publications content. The board manages finances for the Collegian and Royal Purple and approves the budget.

President

The student body president serves as the chief executive for the Student Governing Association.

The president's responsibilities include voicing problems and concerns of the K-State student body to Faculty Senate, the Kansas Board of Regents and the Legislature.

The president meets with the Regents once a month in Topeka.

Other presidential duties include traveling, attending speaking engagements, participating in fund-raisers, attending administrative meetings and functions, appointing students to different committees and attending other various meetings.

Vice president

The vice president has the second highest position in the student government.

The vice president serves as the chief executive of SGA if the president is unable to fulfill his or her duties. The vice president also is the chair of the Educational Opportunity Fund Committee.

The vice president oversees and coordinates special SGA projects and programs and assists the president in appointing cabinet members. The vice president also serves as a liaison between the vice president of institutional advancement and SGA.

Union Governing Board

The Union Governing Board focuses on issues concerning the K-State Student Union

UGB decides whether something follows policy or goes against it.

Fiscal issues are also handled by UGB and reviewed annually.

Meet the candidates

Candidates were asked to complete a survey concerning their goals for the positions for which they are running. Answers were cut off after the 20-word limit and were not corrected for grammar. Some of these candidates may not appear on the ballot because they were disqualified.

ENGINEERING SENATE

Why should students vote for you?
I will faithfully represent the College of Engineering and student body using my student government internship experience.
What goals do you hope to achieve during your term?
I hope to achieve proper representation and voice the students' opinion.
What is the most important issue facing your college or organization?
The most important issue in our college is diversification.

Brad Rice
ENGINEERING SENATE

Why should students vote for you?
We must do more for engineering students. We need to make K-State the best educational experience a student could have.
What goals do you hope to achieve during your term?
Tuition increases must be reduced greatly. I'll do my hardest to ease tuition for engineering students.
What is the most important issue facing your college or organization?
We must cut tuition increases for engineering students, push for a parking garage and make online T-Vals available for students.

Jarret Rice
ENGINEERING SENATE

Why should students vote for you?
I will work hard to represent and serve the student body to the best of my ability.
What goals do you hope to achieve during your term?
I hope to work out a solution that provides a more fair distribution of funds throughout the university.
What is the most important issue facing your college or organization?
One of the most important issues facing students is the high cost of tuition and fees.

Brandon A. Sager
ENGINEERING SENATE

Why should students vote for you?
I have represented the students in the College of Engineering for the last two years as a student senator.
What goals do you hope to achieve during your term?
I want to bring more allocation dollars to the College of Engineering, especially to assist design team in their competitions.
What is the most important issue facing your college or organization?
Two important issues are rising tuition and the hole in the ceiling of Fiedler Atrium; hopefully both situations are improving.

Justin Shrauner

Tim Weninger
ENGINEERING SENATE

Why should students vote for you?
My previous experience on the senate, dedication and high expectations for next year make me a qualified candidate for SGA.
What goals do you hope to achieve during your term?
That privilege fees remain constant so that students can get more for their money, by promoting greater fiscal responsibility.
What is the most important issue facing your college or organization?
The engineering retention rate needs to improve, and the library's hours of operation need to be expanded.

Kyle Wilk
ENGINEERING SENATE

Why should students vote for you?
I am willing to voice my opinion on topics, as well as be the student's voice in the senate.
What goals do you hope to achieve during your term?
I hope to help push for a greatly needed parking garage, and set a timeline out for it.
What is the most important issue facing your college or organization?
I believe tuition and extra fees are an important issue. I pay fees, but don't see much change in the classroom.

What is the most important issue facing your college or organization?
Close mindeness.

Brad Stein
BOARD OF STUDENT PUBLICATIONS (1 YEAR)

Why should students vote for you?
Mainly, I will do a good job. I will represent K-State well. Also, Don't forget: Brad offers you protection.
What goals do you hope to achieve during your term?
To make the Collegian sway more to the middle. I feel the paper is often biased. Also, no more typos.
What is the most important issue facing your college or organization?
The paper needs a bigger forum section. Comics would be tight. And Scratch n' Sniff photos ever other Thursday.

James Stemmons
BOARD OF STUDENT PUBLICATIONS (1 YEAR)

Why should students vote for you?
I'm volunteering because the Collegian needs help. It's better than last year, but it still fails in many areas.
What goals do you hope to achieve during your term?
Focus editors on improving quality. Is gay marriage a topic? Yes, but I feel that other topics are over looked.
What is the most important issue facing your college or organization?
Putting students fees towards needs. People won't read what they don't want.

Candidates battle issues

Presidential candidates Michael Burns, left, and Tyson Moore shake hands after a debate over KSDB 91.9 campus radio station Monday night in the K-State Student Union. General elections start today at 8 a.m. and continue through Wednesday.

Presidential candidate Michael Burns, right, answers a question during a debate that was broadcast on KSDB 91.9 Monday night. Both presidential candidates will make an effort to get students' votes starting today when the voting begins online at www.sgaelections.ksu.edu.

Presidential candidates Michael Burns and Tyson Moore squared off on issues ranging from tuition to popularity on KSDB-FM 91.9 at 5:30 p.m. Monday.

Burns and Moore were featured on Andrew Latham and Nick Arena's Political Pork Show.

First, the competitors debated tuition increases.

Burns said part of the reason he and running mate Grant Groene want a contracted tuition rate is because holding tuition increases under 10 percent, which is on Moore's platform, is already part of the administration's plan.

Their plan would have students pay the same vote for their entire time at K-State, and Burns said they have already talked to Tom Rawson, finance director, about it.

"This is really a solution to a long-term problem," Burns said.

Moore said contracted tuition would not benefit K-State.

"We saw that enrollment numbers might actually go down," he said.

The addition of a parking garage was also brought up and the fact that Burns and Groene do not have it as a platform issue.

Burns said it is not part of their platform because a parking garage is going to be built.

Another issue discussed was student support of Student Governing Association.

Moore said he and running mate Matt Wagner will visit two organizations a week to reach

Babysitter testifies in professor's trial

Prosecution attempts to recreate murder timeline, challenge Murray's alibi

By Bailey DeReus
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The trial against K-State professor Thomas Murray, who is accused of killing his ex-wife Carmin Ross, reconvened Monday afternoon when jurors heard testimony from detectives involved in the case.

Detectives spoke about the driving time that it would take someone to drive from Manhattan to Lawrence and then Lawrence to Manhattan. One detective drove the route in the days after Ross' murder and it took him one hour and 40 minutes to get to Lawrence and an hour and 39 minutes to get back to Manhattan.

The prosecution is saying Murray had time to drive from Manhattan to Lawrence and back again in the hours when Murray and Ross' daughter, Ciara, was in daycare. He dropped Ciara off at 8:25 a.m. and had to be home at about 12:15 p.m. when a family friend dropped her off.

According to Lacy Bonine, who babysat Ciara in the mornings, Murray was considerably earlier than usual in dropping off his daughter.

"He said he was going to be grading midterms, (which) was a little unusual. Usually he would tell me where he was going to be, not what he was going to be doing," said Bonine of the day when the prosecution believes Murray killed Ross in her Lawrence home.

Late in the afternoon the attorneys involved in both sides of the case argued whether a detective's recollection of comments made by witnesses was reliable in court. They approached the bench several times to resolve the issues.

Detective Pat Pollock testified for a second time Monday and was questioned by the prosecution about Murray's refusal for a

ELECTIONS 2005

Voting for Student Governing Association general elections begins at 8 a.m. today and ends at 6 p.m. Wednesday. Vote at www.k-state.edu/elections.

Polls open today in SGA general election

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students can vote in the general election today.

Unlike the primary, students will vote for more positions specific to their college.

Elections Commissioner David McCandless said all students vote for student body president and vice president.

Then all students, except for those at K-State-Salina, vote for the Union Governing Board and Student Publications Board of Directors positions.

Students will vote for senate and council positions within their colleges, and Salina students also vote for their own president and vice president.

Student Body Vice President Erik Ankrom said if students didn't vote in the primary, they should vote in the general election.

"There's a lot of positions that are added during the general elections as well as the president and vice president," he said. "It's very important that you elect somebody that you feel will represent you."

Voting begins at 8 a.m. today and ends 6 p.m. Wednesday at www.k-state.edu/elections.

Student Body President Hayley Urkevich said students should pay attention to all positions, especially president and vice president.

The president is the voice for students at the university and state level, Urkevich said.

"The student body president does have a lot influence on campus," she said.

Presidential pairs spend less money than last year

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Both of this year's presidential candidate pairs spent less than either of last year's candidates over the past week.

Candidates Tyson Moore and Matt Wagner spent the most with $101.93, bringing their total to $2,768.79.

Michael Burns and Grant Groene spent $82.56 this week, for a total of $2,519.15.

Last year, Student Body President Hayley Urkevich and Vice President Erik Ankrom spent $111.23 in the week between the primary and general elections and a total of $3,092.60. Former candidates Vicki Conner and Jeremy Sandall spent $750.53 and a total of $3,207.63.

Elections Commissioner David McCandless said the primary and general elections count as one election as far as expenditures go.

Burns' main expenditure over the week was for making more signs, which cost $56.

"We knew we wanted to do a few more signs just because there were some areas where we didn't have enough signs," he said.

Moore's main cost this week was the rental of a truck sign for $25, so they can drive around campus today and Wednesday. They also spent $23.62 on labels for water bottles.

Candidates	Primary	General
Burns	$2,436.59	$2,519.15
Moore	$2,666.86	$2,768.79

Candidates differ on tuition increase issue; both want to keep rise less than 10 percent

Burns wants contracted tuition; Moore will revise current plan

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

ELECTIONS 2005

Voting for Student Governing Association general elections begins at 8 a.m. today and ends at 6 p.m. Wednesday. Vote at www.k-state.edu/elections.

Both presidential candidate pairs have a stance on rising tuition, but they take different approaches.

Presidential candidate pair Tyson Moore and Matt Wagner are taking the same stance as the current student body president – to keep tuition increases below 10 percent.

Candidates Michael Burns and Grant Groene have a different take. They want to establish a contracted tuition rate, so students will pay the same rate through their years at K-State.

Student Body President Hayley Urkevich said she and Vice President Erik Ankrom originally were going to have the contracted tuition rate on their platform but decided against it.

"Erik and I were going to run on it, but at the time we didn't feel we had enough information," she said. "I do think it is a good idea."

Moore said he and Wagner were thinking about having it as a platform issue, but after researching more, decided against it as well.

"Matt and I researched the issue quite a bit," Moore said. "I was kind of bummed because I really liked the idea."

He said they decided not to do it because it would put too much burden on incoming students.

"It's harder to get into college than stay here," Moore said. "I'm very worried that that option will only hurt K-State and turn away prospective students."

Burns said part of the reason he and Groene looked toward a contracted tuition rate is because keeping tuition increases at less than 10 percent is already part of the administration's plan. They also researched the issue extensively.

In 2003, former Student Body President John O'Hara worked with administration to keep tuition increases under double digits.

"They will continue to live up to the 10 percent promise no matter who is elected president. That's why we looked at another option," Burns said. "It's definitely a long-term tuition plan."

Such plans are implemented in Illinois, and Florida is considering the option, he said.

It will help students plan their futures and know what to expect, Burns said.

"They will not see any tuition increases during their time here," he said.

Bob Krause, vice president of institutional advancement, said the plan is workable, but obstacles can get in the way.

Dilemmas such as state contributions towards higher education, stable enrollment numbers and a mixture of in-state versus out-of-state students have to be considered, Krause said.

"When making those decisions you can't do that without considering the context in which tuition operates," he said.

Krause said he see advantages and disadvantages to the plan.

As far as tuition increases go, it's an added burden on incoming students.

"You have to pile that in on incoming students," he said.

Allowing students to plan for their future is a benefit, Krause said.

"I think there is a sense that there is a stability when you cap the rate, and people can plan for it," he said.

Either way, Krause said both candidates' plans are feasible.

"I think either plan is certainly workable," he said.

Urkevich agreed.

"With the right coordination and the right amount of leg work, it could be implemented," she said. "I do think they have the students' interests in mind with that platform issue."

GM issues large recall of 2004, 2005 vehicles

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

General Motors Corp. is recalling vehicles due to safety defects.

According to a Fort Wayne Web site, the largest recall includes pickups, vans and sport utility vehicles. All of the vehicles are from 2004 and 2005 model years. The vehicles being recalled include the Chevrolet Avalanche and the Hummer H2.

Gary Hassleman, fixed operations director for Holm Automotive Center Inc. in Abilene, Kan., said Holm has a procedure to catch everything that goes through the service department.

"We run every identification number through our computer for recalls. If there is a recall on their vehicle, we let the customers know," Hassleman said.

Hassleman, whose personal vehicle has been recalled a couple of times, said if owners suspect their vehicle may be involved in the recall, they should always call the dealership where the vehicle was purchased.

Safety issues arise when a recall is not fixed immediately.

"It becomes a safety issue to yourself and others," Hassleman said.

Curt Butler, business manager for Wamego Chevrolet Buick Inc. in Wamego, Kan., said owners should bring their vehicle into a GM dealership.

If their vehicle is involved, owners will get a letter from the manufacturer, Hassleman said.

"Customers should try to make an appointment as soon as possible to get their vehicle fixed. It is also important to note that the customer does not have to pay for the recall," Butler said.

12 disqualified despite extension

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Twelve candidates were disqualified for not turning in their expense reports Monday.

It would have been more, but the 10 a.m. deadline was pushed back to 4 p.m. due to confusion.

"It would have been about 40 people probably had we not extended the deadline," Elections Commissioner David McCandless said. "We don't know how many more would have been kicked off, but it would have been quite a few."

Last year, 11 were disqualified due to late or absent expense reports.

The election regulations were changed this semester, and one of the changes included moving the deadline from 4 p.m. Friday to 10 a.m. Monday.

Since the change was made this year, some candidates had the old timeline, so they assumed it was 4 p.m. Monday, McCandless said.

"Some people just read the 4 o'clock and thought it meant 4 o'clock Monday," he said. "They were supposed to be due at 10, so people who turned them in later than that were lucky."

The regulations changes included preventing disqualified candidates from winning positions through write-ins.

McCandless said they decided to push back the deadline when candidates started coming in to turn in their expense reports complaining.

"I'll be recommending they'll move it back to Friday next year," he said.

TO THE POINT

Candidates should observe deadlines

Candidates who missed the 10 a.m. Monday deadline for reporting expenses should be disqualified from the elections.

The deadline was made clear on the Web site, during the mandatory meeting and in the Collegian.

About 30 candidates submitted expense reports between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. Monday and were allowed to continue, Elections Commissioner David McCandless said.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

None of these candidates should appear on today's ballot – but each of them will because of the poor, haphazard enforcement of regulations.

The explanation given for the extension of the deadline was that students who read the regulations before they were changed by Senate had a different deadline.

But that deadline was 4 p.m. Friday, and candidates therefore had an extra two days to hand in expense reports. We do not know which candidates failed to meet the 10 a.m. deadline. If we did, we would vote against them.

K-State does not need a student government comprised of individuals who cannot follow directions and adhere to regulations. We need an elections system that will respect the need for rules and remain firm in enforcement when candidates break those rules.

McCandless said in Monday's Collegian that trying to strictly enforce the rule against chalking within 30 feet of a building "would be a ridiculous exploit."

It appears there is no urgency to enforce any of the elections regulations.

Fourum wars

Love it or hate it, the Fourum isn't proper place for serious issues

JESSE MANNING

I'm going to let you all in on a secret: I hate the Fourum.

It's ridiculous. It's inane. It's a blight on the opinion page.

The callers usually think they're hilarious when they're really not. Some people call in and mumble; others call in and scream; my favorite callers leave a dozen messages, each one more stupid than the last.

The Fourum is also one of the Collegian's biggest attractions.

The anonymous call-in system always creates controversy. The Salina Journal's "Extension 333" opinion line – a Fourum for old people – recently came under fire for comments printed. After a public debate – through the opinion line, no less – the Journal decided to keep "333" around.

Of course they did. Even with the Salina Journal, that's the first section people turn to.

Opinion lines are the journalistic equivalent of fingernails on a chalkboard. The worst parts about them, the elements that frustrate so many people, are their pithiness and their anonymity.

Take this comment for instance, printed on Feb. 17 in the Fourum: "It's kind of sad that we get Martin Luther King Day off but we don't get Presidents' Day off."

The call was short and pithy, but what does it really represent? It could be one of two things: a genuine concern that our presidents are not receiving proper recognition, or racism. Calls in response were equally hazy. In this case, anonymity breeds ambiguity.

Interestingly enough, comments about Presidents' Day brought out a whole slew of "experts" who called in debating how many men had actually served as president. At various points in that particular Fourum war, Lyndon Johnson wasn't elected and 45 men had served as president.

To put this issue to rest: 42 men have served as president as long as you don't count David Rice Atchison. George Bush is the 43rd because Grover Cleveland served as the 22nd and 24th president.

I apologize for the tangent, but as a double major in political science and history, accuracy on such information is my gift and my curse.

We now return to your regularly scheduled rant.

There were many calls about Martin Luther King Day and even more about Black History Month. Pithy comments demanded that there be a White History Month, and angry responses flooded Audix.

Many people had very strong feelings on these issues, among others.

However, if someone feels so passionately about something like having a White History Month, why do they resign their comments to an anonymous opinion line? Society's pressing, important or interesting issues can hardly be reduced to a couple of sentences.

At a really basic level, the Fourum is meant to be fun. There are some comments that are absolutely hilarious, many of them unprintable. One-liners, put-downs, brief criticisms and the always funny "sorry I almost hit you on campus" comments are more than welcome.

Those larger issues – usually the ones that start Fourum wars – should be discussed elsewhere, preferably in an arena where a name can be paired with the comments being made.

Popularity dictates that I keep the Fourum, but I'll ask you all to keep these few things in mind when you call:

Be brief. We don't have room for all of your great philosophical musings.

Know what you want to say. Rambling tends to lose my attention.

Be accurate, or else you'll get another column from me correcting the whole campus on its pitiful knowledge of presidential history.

Humor is good, and please, please, please speak clearly – in English or Spanish. I'd be happy to translate.

Food service employees deserve courtesy, respect

SCOTT SEEL

Since my mother, who shares the same political beliefs as I do, called me a "male Democrat Ann Coulter" because of my last column, I decided to scale the political rhetoric back and go with a light-hearted column this week.

As someone who has held dozens of jobs in the service industry, most in the food industry, I have a fairly advanced, generalized knowledge of the behind-the-scenes atmosphere in these establishments.

Let's just say I have a fairly extensive collection of name-tags and hair nets.

It is from this background and from my present position in the pizza delivery industry that I come to you with a humble request.

Have some consideration for the employees of these establishments when interacting with them.

Obviously, the first thing is just to be polite.

You should because it's the right thing to do and your mommy told you to, but it has some strategic advantages, too.

Always remember, the people with whom you are dealing and their compatriots will be preparing your food, most likely outside of your field of vision. Do you want them to be cursing your name as they're doing this?

I have seen things, folks. I know what happens to rude people and their food.

So with that in mind, here are some other helpful hints to a happy food service experience for all involved.

When you call, pay attention.

I've been on the wrong end of this conversation way too many times:

Me: Thank you for calling, would you like to try (insert special offer here)?

Caller: What are your specials?

Another common occurrence is to decline the special and then proceed to order the exact same thing.

Know what you want when you call:

Me: Thank you for calling, would you like to try (insert special offer here)?

Caller: Um, I don't know. What kind of pizza toppings do you have?

Me: Well, we have lots of toppings.

Caller: (screaming) What do you want on your pizza?
Voices in background: I don't know, what do you want?

Calls like this make me hate my life, and I don't want to hate my life.

Don't be an idiot.

This one is probably the hardest one to comply with:

Caller: What's on a meat pizza?

Me: Beef, sausage, pepperoni, blah, blah, blah.

Caller: Does that count as a one-topping pizza?

This seems exaggerated, but believe me, it is all too common. Just think before you ask stupid questions. That's all I ask.

Tip your waiters, folks:

There really is an etiquette for tipping.

For one, if the total is $12.96, and you give the delivery driver $13, don't say "Keep the change," say something like "I don't need the change."

It's painfully obvious that you aren't giving that four cents to the delivery driver to help offset the cost of gas. You just don't want to deal with the four pennies.

Especially if you are a regular customer at a restaurant or delivery place, it is in your best interest to tip well.

Believe me, employees of these establishments know who tips, and it will affect your service.

I've seen delivery drivers stand at the door and wait so that the pizza of someone who doesn't tip gets there exactly when it was promised and not a second before.

I've also seen drivers bust their humps to get a pizza to the door of a good tipper as fast as humanly possible.

In the end, when you're considerate and kind, you'll get better service, fewer foreign objects in your food, and everyone will be happy.

Scott Seel is a senior in political science. Please send your comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

CAMPUS FOURUM | 395-4444 -or- fourum@spub.ksu.edu

The Campus Fourum is the Collegian's anonymous call-in system. The Fourum is edited to eliminate vulgar, racist, obscene and libelous comments. The comments are not the opinion of the Collegian nor are they endorsed by the editorial staff.

Missouri beat Kansas. We swept Missouri. So in essence, we did beat the Jayhawks.

Hey, everybody go to ratemyprofessors.com and rate your teachers.

Some of us are trying to watch the lightning. Kindly turn off your headlights as you cross the dam.

Why is Bob's closed on Sunday? I want coffee and pie.

Last night my friend got hit by a car, but it's OK. He ran away afterwards.

As a KU fan, I would just like to thank Jim Wooldridge for all the memories and say sorry you won't be around next year.

To the girl with the open bookbag: you're welcome, and I think you're cute as well.

I just saw a group of girls do a Chinese fire drill at the intersection of Bluemont and Juliette.

Well, the rumor around Lawrence is that Wooldridge is out and Lon Krueger is coming back. Go Cats.

For future information, the library is no longer a place to plan your spring break trip.

Way to go, Lacey Storer. Thanks for using my real name in the article. You just bought yourself a libel lawsuit, and it made your article that much worse.

On a scale between one and 10, you're an idiot.

As a rule, I don't drink. As a habit, I do.

Beer: the reason I wake up every afternoon.

Just so everybody knows, that dollar delivery fee is pocketed by the restaurant. It doesn't go to the delivery person.

Goldwater finalists named

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Four K-State students have been chosen as finalists for the 2005 Barry M. Goldwater Scholarship. The Goldwater Scholarship is for mathematics, statistics and engineering students interested in research.

Jim Hohenbary, K-State scholarship adviser , said the scholarship encourages students to pursue careers in research.

"I think the purpose of the Goldwater Scholarship is basically to promote the entry of high quality mathematicians, statisticians and engineers into those fields," Hohenbary said.

To be eligible for the scholarship, students must have a grade point average of 3.0 or above.

The winners of the scholarship will be announced in late March or early April. The Goldwater Scholarship awards scholarships in the amount of $7,500 to roughly 300 students nationwide. Since 1989, K-State has had 49 Goldwater scholars and is first in the country of Goldwater Scholarship winners.

This year's 2005 Goldwater Scholarship nominees are:

MATT BASEL

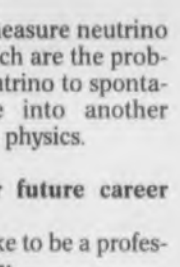
What kind of research are you currently working on?
I am doing solo-gel chemistry with silicas and electrochemical deposition of copper nano-wires in one project, and I'm also doing molecular template of silicas. In the first project we're trying to find a cheap way to make nano-wires. The second project is a quick way to measure the amount of neurotransmitters in fluid.

What are your career goals?
I'm hoping to go to graduate school, after that I'd really like to go into some kind of pharmaceutical chemistry, specifically cancer research.

MEG FASULO
Senior in chemistry, biochemistry and microbiology



Fasulo

What kind of research are you currently working on?
I've been doing research in a supra-molecular chemistry lab. It's the interactions between molecules and specifically the hydrogen bond. We're trying to find out more about them.

What are your career goals?
I think I want to be a professor of chemistry and do research.

MIKE HIGGINS
Senior in mathematics and statistics

What kind of research are you currently working on?
My research dealt with invariance of three manifolds with an embedded link. Three manifold looks locally like a three-dimensional state, and an invariant is a function with the property that if the spaces are the same, the invariant will yield the same value.

Higgins

What are your career goals?
I want to go to graduate school in either mathematics or statistics and work to become a professor.

DAVID THOMPSON
Senior in electrical engineering

What kind of research are you currently working on?
I'm working with the Physics department with neutrino oscillation.

Thompson

I'm helping to design and experiment to measure neutrino oscillations, which are the probability of the neutrino to spontaneously change into another type. It's particle physics.

What are your future career goals?
Long term, I'd like to be a professor at a university.

Fed approves interest rate increase; changes may be seen on credit card bills

By Kt McBratney
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Federal Reserve Board approved a .25-percent increase in the federal interest rate.

The sixth consecutive rate increase brings the rate to 2.5 percent in an effort to support economic activity, according to a Federal Reserve press release.

Even though the increase and overall interest rate are relatively small in comparison to past years, Tracy Turner, assistant professor of economics, said the changes will likely translate into higher interest rates for individuals. Turner said students carrying credit card debt, paying off car or student loans, or looking to buy a house may see rate increases as a result of the Federal Reserve's decision.

While individuals may see some immediate changes, Lyle Butler, president and CEO of the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, said it will take time to determine the impact of the increase on area businesses.

"The interest rate got down so low to stimulate the economy that these increases haven't affected the average consumer or student a lot yet.

"The greatest impact is going to be on businesses who borrow money, whether from a local, regional or national bank.

"Right now, things aren't too different than six months ago," Butler said.

Graduation fair offers convenience

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Announcements, caps, gowns, tassels and more will be on display in the K-State Student Union Bookstore today and Wednesday as part of the graduation fair.

Janice White, Union Bookstore employee, said there will be representatives from companies available to help students.

These companies include Wilsie Cap and Gown, CB Announcements and Balfour.

White said although the Union Bookstore offers the same packages and information, the fair is an added bonus.

"We set up the grad fair so that it's a little bit faster," she said.

"That way we can help more people at one time if they come on a grad fair day."

Convenience also plays a role in setting up a grad fair, White said.

"We're just trying to make it one-stop shopping so they can get everything taken care of in one trip," she said.

Health insurance not required

By Amy Bolton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State still does not require students to carry a health insurance policy, despite a growing number of universities that do.

Many schools are losing money because students without health insurance are not paying bills at the student health center.

Schools such as Ohio State University, the University of Connecticut and the 10 schools in the University of California system all require students to have health insurance coverage.

Carol Kennedy, health promotion director at Lafene Health Center, said eventually students have to pay to remain a K-State student.

"It takes care of itself because students are barred from enrollment. So if they want to continue as students, they have to pay their health bills," she said.

Jay Reppert, Lafene medical director, said requiring health insurance would benefit students who get ill often, but would cost healthy students more.

"In effect, it's a tuition raise," Reppert said.

Reppert said many undergraduate students are covered by their parents' health insurance policy and graduate students are usually covered as a part of their graduate assistance packages.

Kira Peterson, sophomore in theater, said she had to take a year off from school because of the high cost of health bills owed to Lafene. However, the cost of purchasing insurance was more than the cost of the procedure she had done.

At the University of Nebraska, the only students who are required to carry health insurance are international students, said Jennifer Snyder, market coordinator of the University Health Center. She said international students are billed for health insurance unless they prove they already have insurance.

Reppert said a problem with requiring students to carry health insurance is that many universities only require them to show proof of insurance. After providing proof, students will cancel their private policy and get a full refund, thus losing coverage.

Fees for healthcare provided at Lafene are generally lower than those elsewhere because Lafene receives privilege fees to help with the costs of health care.

Kennedy said about $90 per semester per student is allotted to Lafene. The remainder of the cost is paid by the student or an insurance company.

"We will bill to any health insurance company that has an address in the United States," Kennedy said.

Syrian soldiers leaving Lebanon posts; beginning of complete withdrawal

By Hussein Dakroub
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MDEIREJ, Lebanon – Syrian soldiers loaded trucks with furniture and other supplies Monday and drove east from the Lebanese mountain posts they have held for decades, the first signs of a redeployment to Lebanon's Bekaa Valley announced by the leaders of the neighboring nations.

The pullback began as more than 70,000 Lebanese shouting "Freedom! Sovereignty! Independence!" thronged Beirut in the biggest demonstration yet of anti-Syria anger that has fueled recent street protests. Washington rejected the redeployment as insufficient.

Syrian President Bashar Assad and his Lebanese counterpart, Emile Lahoud, met in Syria's capital, Damascus, to outline plans for shifting Syrian troops closer to the Syrian border by the end of March. But they were vague on the timing of a complete withdrawal from Lebanon.

Lacking a timeline, the plan was unlikely to satisfy the opposition and the international community, which have demanded that all 14,000 Syrian soldiers leave the country.

At least 70,000 people – some estimates put the figure at 100,000 or more – demonstrated in downtown Beirut, waving Lebanon's cedar-tree flag and thundering, "Syria out!"

"Yes, for withdrawal to the Bekaa, but, yes, first to the full withdrawal behind the Lebanese-Syrian border," opposition lawmaker Walid Eido told the crowd.

The protesters marched to the site of a Feb. 14 bombing that killed former Prime Minister Rafik Hariri and touched off street protests that drove Lebanon's pro-Syrian government to resign a week ago.

Many Lebanese accuse both the current and former Syrian governments of responsibility for Hariri's death. Both deny any involvement.

Foes of the Syrian presence are calling for demonstrations to continue.

But in a sign of the divisions in Lebanon, the militant Islamic group Hezbollah urged a counterdemonstration Tuesday to show loyalty to Syria and denounce international interference.

EQUESTRIAN

Equestrian team ties, gains momentum for postseason

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State western equestrian team tied Black Hawk as the high-point team at the SMS show over the weekend, giving the Wildcats added momentum heading into the upcoming regionals.

Head coach Teresa Slough said she left the SMS show optimistic about her squad's performance.

"I came away feeling really good about this weekend," she said. "The girls rode just the way we wanted them to. They were focused, they didn't make mental errors. I felt like they did just exactly what we wanted them to do, so I felt really good about this weekend."

Individually, senior Brandi Vogel captured two high-point titles to lead the way for the Wildcats, who solidified their 17-point lead over Black Hawk. Slough said she saw a lot of promise from many different riders at the show.

"Rachel Pierson won all three of her classes, so she did a great job, as did Kristin Tanney. She also won all three of hers," she said. "We had two that had never been to a show before, Jessica Spalding and Stacie Lutz, who both came home with two first-place finishes. We had a number of open riders that were either the high-point or the reserve high-point rider, and each and every one of them did a fantastic job too."

The Wildcats hope to build off of their collective solid performance as they prepare for the post-season.

Slough said as a team, there haven't been many miscues the whole squad needs to work on but individually, each rider knows what she needs to polish up before regionals.

"Each of the riders still has little things that they need to work on," Slough said. "They know what those things are and we'll just continue to work on them. We just need to make sure that we stay focused and not let ourselves get distracted and just push hard these last couple of weeks."

Sproles continues to impress in combine

MICHAEL ASHFORD

Former K-State running back Darren Sproles is once again proving the doubters wrong.

This last week at the National Football League's combine in Indianapolis, the "Tank" put on one of the more impressive performances of all the athletes there, which could mean a higher draft pick and a fatter paycheck come draft day.

The combine, for those who don't know, is where senior college football players from around the country are invited to perform tests and feats of athleticism for NFL scouts.

At this year's combine, Sproles did what he has done his whole life.

He went out and showed everyone he could do what they said he couldn't, and in the process, he wowed the scouts.

The 40-yard dash, Sproles ran in 4.46 seconds, which tied for the fastest time by a running back with J.J. Arrington of California. Sproles ran a 3.96 in the 20-yard shuttle, second only to Noah Herron of Northwestern (3.95).

But perhaps the most impressive feat was Sproles' display of upper-body strength.

Even though he weighed in at just 5-foot-6, 187 pounds, Sproles bench-pressed 225 pounds 23 times, the most reps among any of the running backs at the combine.

Together with his performance at the Senior Bowl on Jan. 19, where he was named the North squad's offensive MVP after posting 55 yards rushing and a touchdown to help the North beat the South 23-13, Sproles has proven in the last few months just how valuable he would be on an NFL team.

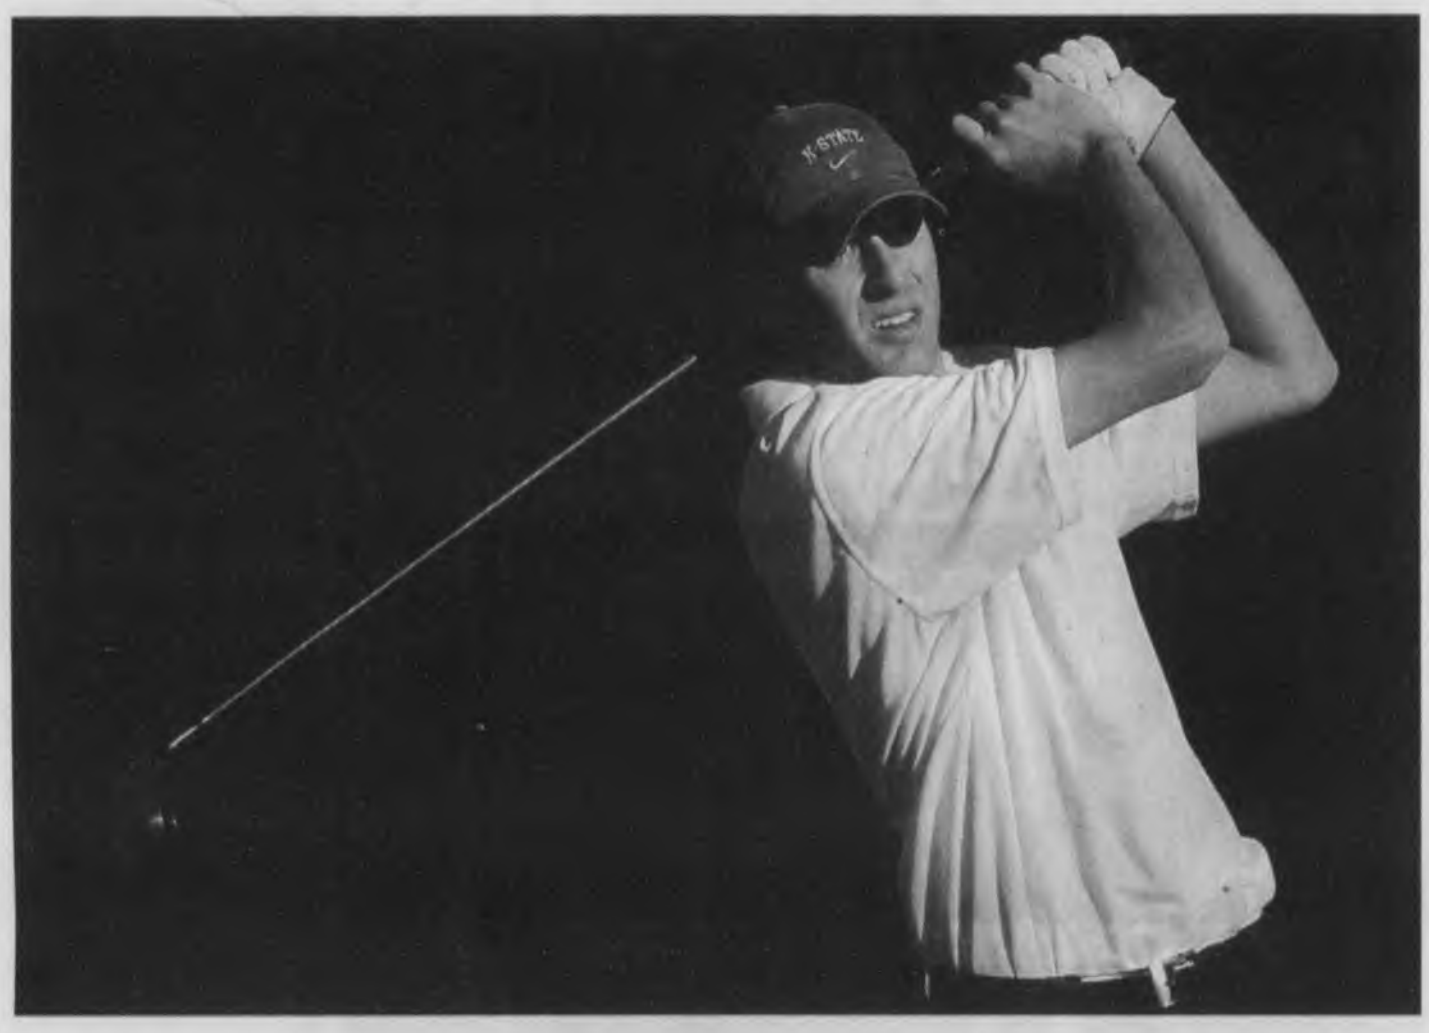
Everyone wants to bag on the guy for his height which, interestingly enough, was a half-inch taller than his measured height at the Senior Bowl, but you can't test what Sproles has that sets him apart from all the others – heart, dedication and determination.

No, he's not the biggest guy, but you can't overlook the numbers he has put up in his career.

He became K-State's career-leading rusher this past year, finishing his collegiate career with 4,979 yards, and he also set the Big 12 record for career all-purpose yards with 6,812.

This happened in spite of people saying he could never make it as a full-time college back because of his size.

Some team will probably draft him in the third or fourth round – he could sneak into the lower second round – and in a few years, he will have everyone in the league wishing they had picked him higher.



Sproles will succeed in the NFL not only because he is a great running back, but because he wants it more, and he will do anything to become successful, just like he has all his life.

I can't wait to see him in an NFL jersey. I just hope it's not Oakland black or Denver blue.

Michael Ashford is a junior in print journalism. You can e-mail him at sports@spub.ksu.edu.

MEN'S GOLF

Team shows signs of improvement

Team earns 6th in USF Invitational

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While the Florida sun was a nice reminder that spring is almost here, it was not enough for the K-State men's golf team to notch a victory at the Dick Wittcoff/USF Invitational in Tampa.

The Wildcats finished sixth in the 15-team pool with a three-day score of 908, 20 strokes behind host South Florida, who won the team title.

Coach Tim Norris said although sixth place is higher than K-State is used to finishing, the tournament served as a good learning experience.

"The golf course was challenging, and we just weren't up to the challenge," Norris said.

"I think the players have a better understanding of where their games are after this tournament."

Matt Van Cleave, senior, once again paced the Wildcats with a 10th-place finish and score of 224.

Ben Kern, junior, was not far behind Van Cleave with a combined score of 225 to finish 12th. Nick Schumacher, senior, followed suit, firing a 226 to tie for 14th.

Kern, who earned his fourth consecutive top-20 finish, said he was satisfied with his finish, but that the team was not playing to its potential.

"I'm not going to complain about 12th place," Kern said, "but I think we all could've done better."

Norris said the overall size of the course proved to be the Wildcats' biggest problem.

"The greens were very small – probably the smallest we've seen all year," Norris said. "The fairways were also very narrow with lots of marshes."

Regardless, Norris said, it was an enjoyable tournament.

"Overall, it was a great experience," Norris said. "We had perfect weather every day."

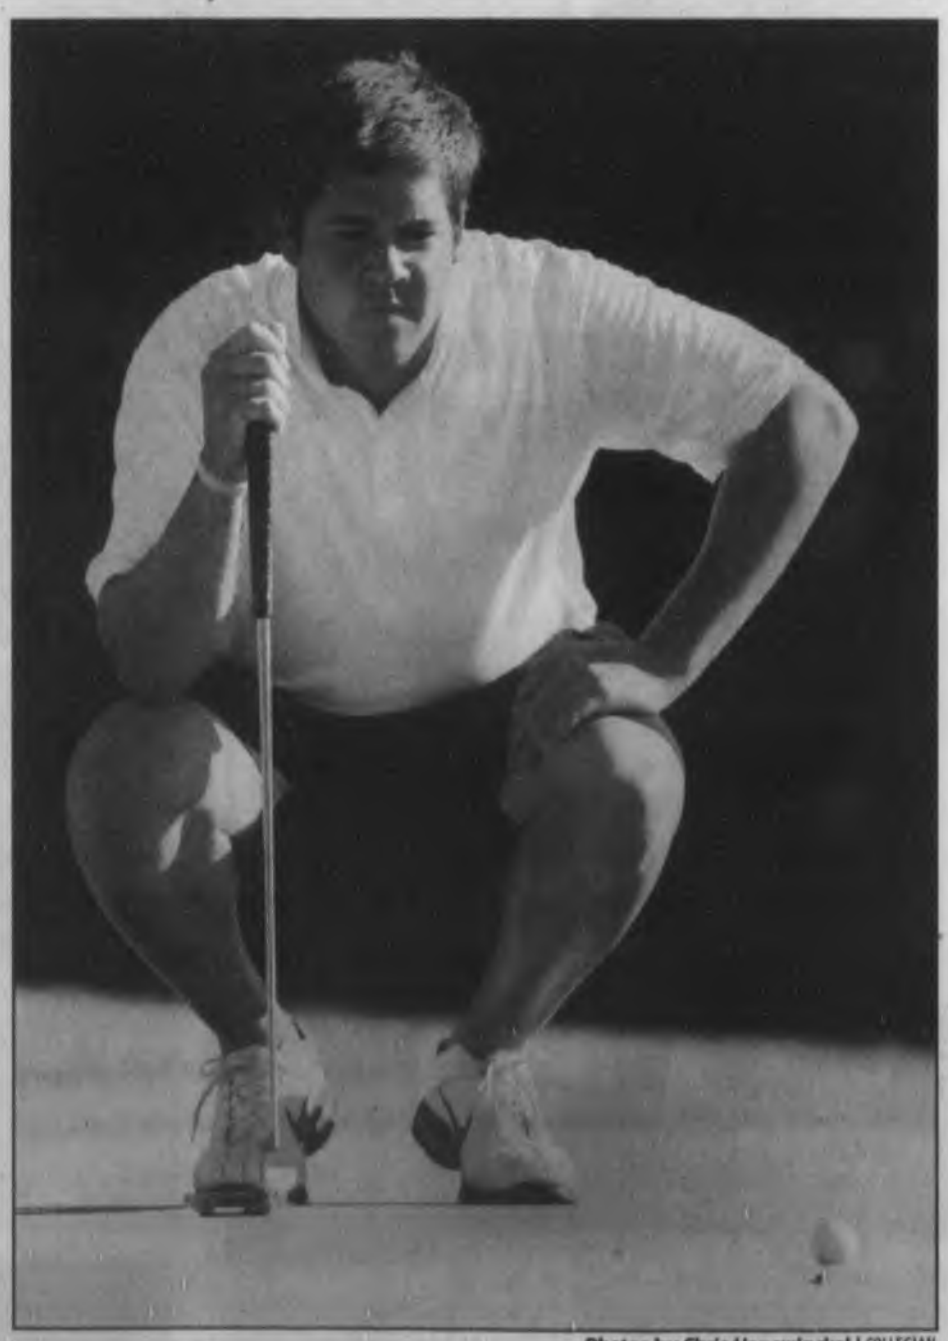
In addition to good weather, Van Cleave also received good news this past weekend.

The Big 12 Conference announced on Sunday that Van Cleave was named the Big 12 Golfer of the Month for February, an honor no Wildcat has received in the nine-year existence of the Big 12 Conference.

Van Cleave's recognition was based on his impressive first-place performance at the Matlock Collegiate Classic, Feb. 14-15, in Lakeland, Fla.

"It's definitely a honor," Van Cleave said, "even though there are people in the past who are more deserving than myself. It reconfirms hard work pays off."

Norris agreed with Van Cleave that consistent effort produces positive results.



"It's really a testament to his work ethic," Norris said.

"Matt sets an example for the other players, that if you work hard over the winter, you can come out and play well."

The Wildcats are now focusing on the Jim Hackler Intercollegiate to be held March 13-14 in Myrtle Beach, S.C.

Kern said the weather will make it easier to prepare for this tournament, as well as other upcoming matches.

"Once the weather is nice and we're playing everyday, we'll get better," Kern said.

Staff Reports

MBB | Massey named to Big 12 2nd team

K-State senior forward Jeremiah Massey was named to the Big 12 coaches' all-conference second team on Monday, becoming just the second Wildcat to be named to the second team since the league began in 1996.

Massey

Larry Reid is the only other K-State player to be named to the second team, as he was selected for the honor after the 2001-02 season.

Massey, a Detroit native, is averaging 17.9 points per game and 6.9 rebounds per game, both team highs.

Massey is currently on an 18-game streak of scoring in double figures, which dates back to Dec. 30. He was twice named the Big 12 Conference Player of the Week this season.

GOLF | Van Cleave named golfer of the month

K-State senior golfer Matt Van Cleave was named the Big 12 Golfer of the Month for February.

Van Cleave

The senior from Maryville, Mo., tied for first place at the Matlock Invitational in Lakeland, Fla.

The honor for Van Cleave is the first ever for a Wildcat golfer in the history of the Big 12 Conference.

Van Cleave currently paces the squad with an average of 72.4 in 21 rounds. His current stroke average would rank first all-time in K-State history if the season ended today.

Bands resurrect dance music

Daft Punk, Basement Jaxx put fresh spin on club music

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Illustration by Mark Sibilla | COLLEGIAN

Dance music has come in many different styles and flavors throughout the decades.

From the discotheques of the 1970s to the new wave clubs of the 1980s and the raves of the 1990s, club-goers have danced for countless hours to funky bass lines and pounding drums. Outside the circle of dancers, critics and other members of the music community often meet dance music with disgust. Dance music has a tendency to pigeonhole itself with similar rhythms and beats and a tendency to shy away from experimentation.

Dance music was resurrected in the 1990s by two club-going production duos that brought an original flair to worn beats and styles. The first group is Basement Jaxx, a duo from London consisting of Simon Ratcliffe and Felix Buxton. The second is Daft Punk from Paris.

Basement Jaxx met at a riverboat party in Thames. The two members draw influences from funk groups such as War and George Clinton's P-Funk squad, as well as disc jockeys who are prominent in house music (a less poppy, bass-driven music often heard in underground clubs). The pair officially became a duet in 1994.

During the mid-to-late nineties, Buxton and Ratcliffe released numerous EPs that drew praise from producers and critics from both sides of the Atlantic. Basement Jaxx's popularity grew and several major labels began courting the group in order to record a debut full-length. The duo finally signed to the independent XL label.

Basement Jaxx recorded and released its debut full-length disc, "Remedy," in 1999. It was met with immediate praise. Basement Jaxx managed to create music that was accessible, danceable and original. The prominent single from its debut was the frantic "Red Alert."

Their second album, "Rooty," was released in 2001. The album found the duo tightening its sound by making it have even more ground in pop and funk. The album garnered acclaim from critics because of its sleeker sound. Basement Jaxx scored a minor hit with the single, "Romeo."

For its third album, "Kish Kash," released in 2003, Basement Jaxx collaborated with many different vocalists and artists. Siouxsie Sioux, Dizzee Rascal and JC Chasez were among many artists who helped Basement Jaxx create a brilliant third album.

The best praise for the Basement Jaxx must be for its ability to create original dance music through a unique style of bass, blips and drums. Basement Jaxx have created and released unique, standout albums, unashamed, regardless of the popular, current music scene.

Courtesy art

Daft Punk is a duo that formed in 1992 in Paris, France. The duo of DJs Guy-Manuel de Homem-Christo and Thomas Bangalter took Kraftwerk's idea of humans imitating robots a step further. Daft Punk created music as humans pretending to be robots pretending to be humans. What is most surprising is how the duo is able to make this scenario work and create electronic music with a surprising amount of warmth and heart.

The duo began as Darling, an indie cover band. It quickly ditched this idea and went to create music for the dance floor.

After releasing two popular singles ("The New Wave" and "Da Funk,"), Daft Punk was subjected to a minor bidding war between labels before signing to Virgin Records. It released its debut, "Homework," in 1997.

Four long years later, audiences were introduced to Daft Punk's brilliant sophomore album, "Discovery." The album was a more unified effort and brought together the duo's signature sound of funk, techno and house, infused with hip-hop and sampling. Daft Punk scored hits with such tracks as "One More Time" and "Harder, Better, Faster, Stronger."

Daft Punk has only released insignificant remix albums since "Discovery," but the world will wait with bated breath until Daft Punk gives us more danceable tracks with robotic vocals.

Dance music, as with all music, has evolved much since it has crawled out of the musical primordial ooze. Bands such as Basement Jaxx and Daft Punk help create fun and original dance music, which, sadly, has not become as popular as it should. With these bands still creating music, we can have hope that dance music will never really die as long as it is infused with a sense of freshness and unabashed joy.

Aggieville saloon offers casual dining experience

By Jessica Grant
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The sign hangs on the dark red walls, just over the large window that opens into the kitchen, right next to the "Loretta Forever" plaque proudly displayed above the "daily specials" chalkboard.

The sign reads "Because a nekid cowboy is a cranky cowboy."

Welcome to So Long Saloon.

So Long Saloon is the eclectic little Aggieville venue that serves as a restaurant by day and a bar by night.

Located at the corner of 12th and Moró streets, So Long Saloon exudes personality and ambience. People who love the kitsch decorum of Rock-A-Belly Deli will be perfectly at home with the animated decorations and cozy atmosphere of So Long Saloon.

Entering the saloon can be a somewhat overwhelming experience. The mirror and the bar, two of the restaurant's signature features, dominate opposite walls and catch the eye immediately. The bar is a dark wood masterpiece that dwarfs an entire wall. The bar is beautifully carved and crafted in a manner rarely seen in contemporary restaurants, and, in my humble opinion, is reason enough to visit So Long Saloon.

The mirror is framed by simple brown wood, which is dotted with antique dice, spoons, Mardi Gras beads and colored lights which playfully reflect off the skeletons that adorn the ceiling.

Framed colorful cartoon prints that pay homage to Loretta Lynn, Tammy Wynette and Hank Williams dot the walls and reflect the dark bluegrass/country feel of So Long Saloon.

The restaurant's menu is also reflective of the unique nature of So Long Saloon. Appetizers include everything from Fried Tacos to Chipotle Raspberry and Black Bean Dip to Fried Pickles. "Sammies and Stuff" (which is cowboy for sandwiches) includes burgers, chicken sandwiches, and even PBJ's: "Just like Mom made – this time, it's with a tasty side instead of healthy stuff."

Sides include French fries, potato salad, house salad or onion rings.

I recommend the onion rings, which are the crisp beer battered kind. The personalities of the wait staff fit perfectly into the laid back essence of the restaurant.

They are friendly enough to greet anyone who ventures in and quick to serve, but they have enough discretion to let the patron enjoy a meal without being invasive or overbearing.

Size is the biggest problem with So Long Saloon. With a maximum capacity of only 46, it is easy to understand why there are only four tables, three booths and a bar in the restaurant. This means that getting a table during busy lunch or dinner hours can be almost impossible.

The only other problem that I could detect with the restaurant is embarrassingly nitpicky. Regardless of the rich and tasty sauces that coat many dishes, So Long Saloon provides the kind of thin, road-stop-dive type of napkins which are rendered useless after only one swipe over the mouth.

However, it must be noted that So Long Saloon does provide an apparently unlimited supply of these paltry napkins.

With most meals under $8 and a wide array of appetizers, salads and sandwiches, So Long Saloon is the perfect place to grab lunch.

Ja Rule apologizes for club altercation

Ja Rule apologized to the city of Toronto after pleading guilty to assault in an altercation at a downtown nightclub last year.

Ja Rule

The 29-year-old rapper, whose real name is Jeffrey Atkins, said he was sorry as he stood on the courthouse steps Monday with his lawyer, wife and bodyguards.

He received a $1,200 fine after pleading guilty to assault for an incident that took place at La Rouge Nightclub in June 2004.

Carter arrested on DUI

Former Backstreet Boy Nick Carter was arrested and charged last weekend for alleged drunken driving, police said.

Carter

Carter, 25, was behind the wheel of a vehicle observed committing a traffic violation when police stopped him Saturday night in downtown Huntington Beach, police Lt. Dave Bunetta said.

The officer who stopped him noticed some traffic violation was occurring, Bunetta said. Carter was arrested and booked for investigation of drunken driving and his vehicle was impounded, Bunetta said. The type of vehicle wasn't disclosed.

Guerrilla attacks in Iraq kill 31, wound dozens

By Todd Pitman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – Guerrillas launched a series of attacks in Iraq on Monday that left 31 people dead and dozens wounded as the country took its first major step toward forming a government whose most crucial task will be dealing with the insurgency.

Bulgaria said one of its soldiers killed in Iraq on Friday was likely hit by friendly fire from coalition troops.

The shooting came on the same day that U.S. troops fired on a car carrying Italian journalist Giulilana Sgrena, wounding her and killing an Italian intelligence officer who negotiated her release from insurgents.

Al-Qaeda in Iraq purportedly claimed responsibility in an Internet statement for much of the bloodshed – violence in and around Baqouba, 35 miles northeast of Baghdad, where 15 people died. Another car bomb killed 12 people in Balad.

The Baqouba assaults included a car bomb, three roadside bombs and small arms attacks on three checkpoints, one of them just south of Baqouba in Muradiyah, said police Col. Mudhafar al-Jubbori.

U.S. Maj. Ed House said a suicide car bombing outside a police station there killed nine people and wounded 17. The dead included the bomber, two police officers, three soldiers and three civilians.

In another attack near the city, a group of about 20 insurgents in five vehicles attacked an army checkpoint with assault rifles and rocket-propelled grenades, killing five Iraqi soldiers. The troops fought back, killing one of the attackers, House said.

Militants also fired a mortar near the blue-domed governor's office, but no one was hurt, said Maj. Richard Goldenberg, a spokesman for the U.S. 42nd Infantry Division.

Another car bomb exploded outside the home of Iraqi army Lt. Col. Mohammed Abdul Mutaled in Balad, 50 miles north of Baghdad, killing 12 people and injuring 21 others, said the city's police chief, Ayad Ahmed.

Hospital officials said most of the casualties were bystanders.

In Baghdad, gunmen killed two police officers and wounded a third in a drive-by shooting in the eastern slum of Sadr City, said Dr. Abdul Jabar Solan, director of a hospital where the casualties were brought.

Bush nominates U.N. ambassador

By Barry Schweid
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – John R. Bolton, a tough-talking arms control official who rarely muffles his views in diplomatic niceties, was chosen Monday by President Bush to be U.S. ambassador to the United Nations.

Senate Democrats immediately assailed the nomination, arguing that it didn't make sense for the president to pick a diplomat who has sometimes been critical of the world body at a time when mending fences with the international community was imperative. Senate Minority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., said Bolton's selection sent "all the wrong signals."

Anticipating a possible fight over confirmation – in 2001, Bolton was approved for his current post over the opposition of 43 Democratic senators – Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice said, "Through our history some of our best ambassadors have been those with strong voices." She mentioned former U.N. ambassadors Jeanne Kirkpatrick and Daniel Patrick Moynihan.

In his tenure, Bolton has angered officials in North Korea and China with his hard-edged approach. In fact, the Pyongyang government, furious with his comments, refused to negotiate with him.

Bolton, whose career has included posts in the administrations of President Reagan and the first President Bush, promised to work closely with members of Congress to advance Bush's policies and said his record demonstrated "clear support for effective multilateral diplomacy."

Mindful that he, like the president, has sometimes questioned the relevance of the United Nations, Bolton said, "Working closely with others is essential to ensure a safer world."

Rice praised the international organization as she announced Bolton's selection.

"The United States is committed to the success of the United Nations, and we view the U.N. as an important component of our diplomacy," she said.

She said Bolton "knows how to get things done," citing his work in nullifying a U.N. resolution that equated Zionism, the philosophic underpinning of a Jewish state, with racism, and in organizing 60 countries to curb the spread of dangerous weapons.

U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan, who was alerted in a telephone call from Rice in advance of the appointment, said through a spokesman that he looked forward to working with Bolton.

"I don't know about what previous biases he may bring here," said spokesman Stephane Dujarric.

"We have nothing against people who do hold us accountable.

"On the contrary, I think we do want to be held accountable."

John Kerry, D-Mass., said that if Bush were serious about reaching out to the world, "why would he choose someone who has expressed such disdain for working with our allies?" Kerry said Bolton's nomination "carries with it baggage we cannot afford."

School funding plans criticized

By John Hanna
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA – Gov. Kathleen Sebelius' proposals to increase higher education spending were attacked Monday as some House Republicans hunted for dollars to divert to elementary and secondary schools.

House GOP leaders hope to boost aid to K-12 programs – and meet a Kansas Supreme Court mandate – without raising taxes. House Speaker Doug Mays, of Topeka, has said he and fellow Republicans expect to trim $100 million from parts of Sebelius' proposed budget to provide new dollars for public schools.

A House Appropriations subcommittee proposed deleting $10 million of the $23 million increase that Sebelius is seeking for universities, community colleges and vocational-technical colleges. The full committee backed away Monday, voting to postpone any decision until legislators wrap up their budget work in late April or early May.

Some Republicans argued that K-12 spending should be the Legislature's highest priority. The Supreme Court gave legislators until April 12 to add to the current $2.7 billion in aid to public schools and distribute the money more fairly.

Sebelius said diverting money from higher education or other programs to help public schools shortchanges students.

"The Supreme Court has given the Legislature a real job to do, and so far it has acted more like a kid abusing a credit card than an adult investing in the future," Sebelius said in a statement. "It's time to grow up and get serious."

The House last week approved a plan to boost K-12 spending by $113 million for the fiscal year beginning July 1.

Evolution debate continues

By John Milburn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA – Eighty years after the Scopes Monkey Trial, State Board of Education members plan to hear arguments over whether they should add criticism of evolution to Kansas' science standards.

The board's subcommittee on science standards agreed Monday to have six days of hearings in May in Topeka. The subcommittee, concerned that the hearings might be compared to the 1925 trial of high school science teacher John Scopes in Dayton, Tenn., said they aren't putting evolution on trial. Scopes was convicted of giving lessons on the theory.

"That was a trial, these are hearings," said Board Chairman Steve Abrams, of Arkansas City. "I hope we have a greater understanding of each other's positions."

The subcommittee members are Abrams, Kathy Martin, of Clay Center, and Connie Morris, of St. Francis, all Republicans, and half of six conservatives holding a majority on the 10-member board. Later this year, the board expects to consider changes in the science standards, which currently describe evolution as a key concept for students to learn.

The three board members tentatively set their hearings for May 5-7 and 12-14, with the exact times and place to be determined. During the hearings, only scientists will testify, according to the subcommittee. The scientists will include experts on evolution and proponents of other ideas about the origins of life.

The board members also picked a theme, from a 2001 congressional report on the federal No Child Left Behind education reform law – saying science should be open to alternative theories when there are controversies.

"We're trying to get to the bottom of a great controversy," Abrams said.

Last year, the Board of Education appointed a 26-member panel of educators to propose changes in the existing science standards.

However, in January, conservatives questioned whether the panel had adequately considered views from advocates of creationism or intelligent design. A minority on the panel also sought to ensure that students are exposed to more criticism of evolution. Conservatives then called for public hearings.

The board's subcommittee on science standards had considered taking only written arguments. But Morris said she favored oral arguments, allowing more questions and giving creationism equal time with evolution. She said students should be exposed to all views and should reach conclusions about the origins of life based on what they are taught at home.

"I know in my heart what my religious beliefs are," Morris said.

Evolution says that species change in response to environmental and genetic factors over the course of many generations. Intelligent design, a form of creationism, holds that there is evidence of an intelligent design behind the origin of the universe, the formation of the Earth and biological change.

Opponents of injecting more criticism of evolution into science classes contend it would be a step toward teaching intelligent design or creationism, which holds life and the Earth were created by God from nothing.

Harry McDonald, president of Kansas Citizens for Science and a retired Olathe high school science teacher, described the hearings as a "farce" and "fiasco." His organization doesn't want scientists to participate.

As for the board, McDonald said, "They are looking for a stage to pretend they are judging science."

Abrams said the outcome of the hearings wasn't predetermined.

more students if elected.

"We want to be held accountable," Moore said.

Since Burns isn't greek and Groene is and Burns is in Student Senate but Groene isn't, he said they have a good balance.

"We definitely want to continue that balance," Burns said.

Moore said it's generally important for greeks to hold leadership roles at K-State.

"Greek leadership at K-State is very important within the greek community," he said. "Hopefully these people who are running that aren't greek will get elected and bring diversity to SGA."

Although some years' elections may seem like a popularity contest, it wasn't this year, Moore said.

"I think a lot of people fall into that misconception that it is a popularity contest," Burns said. "I really believe that it's because we brought a strong platform to the students."

Moore agreed. He said the issues were very important this year.

"It's about the issues," he said. "Hopefully, this year SGA is not about popularity."

"We rented a politician's sign just to kind of get the word out to more students," he said.

Moore had an extra $125.56 due to people buying more T-shirts.

"Any money left over is going to be given to charity," Moore said.

Burns' personal contributions decreased, and he had no extra contributions.

Their personal contributions were $642.15 compared to $779.59 last week.

"There was just a lot of people that came up to us on Monday and Tuesday that offered to buy shirts," Burns said. "That lowered our personal contributions."

second interview in the week after Ross' death. On Nov. 14, 2003, a day after it is assumed Ross was killed, Murray gave a taped statement. Nine hours of the tape were played for the jury in the first two days of the trial.

Detectives testified in court on Monday about their questioning of Bonine in 2003. She talked about the personality of Ciara, Murray and Ross' four-year-old daughter. Detectives asked Bonine if Ciara liked to play rough games.

"Ciara watched first and if it looked like fun, she would join in," Bonine said.

In Murray's taped statement he commented that scratches on his hand are from rough-housing with Ciara in the days before Ross' murder.

Two witnesses will be called by the state in the next two days.

Polls close at 6 tonight for elections

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Voting continues today until 6 p.m., and results will be announced shortly thereafter.

Election results will be announced during a special edition of Manhattan Matters on Cox channel 8.

Election results will be announced tonight about 6:45 or 7 p.m. Soon after, KSDB-FM 91.9 also will announce the results.

Tara Hanney, co-anchor for election coverage, said the student body president and vice president vote totals will be announced. Individual positions will not be read, but they will appear in a graphic.

"We'll have it roll through," Hanney said. "We're not actually going to announce names."

She said election coverage starts at 6:30 p.m. talking to current Student Body President Hayley Urkevich, Vice President Erik Ankrom, Elections Commissioner David McCandless and the winners of the presidency.

McCandless said students should remember to vote today if they haven't already.

Students can write-in any student they want, but disqualified candidates will not be allowed in office, even if they get enough votes, he said.

Election regulations were changed this semester so disqualified candidates will not be able to take office. In previous years, they could.

"They can write in whomever they want," McCandless said. "We can't stop them, but those people won't be able to take office."

Professor's online searches presented

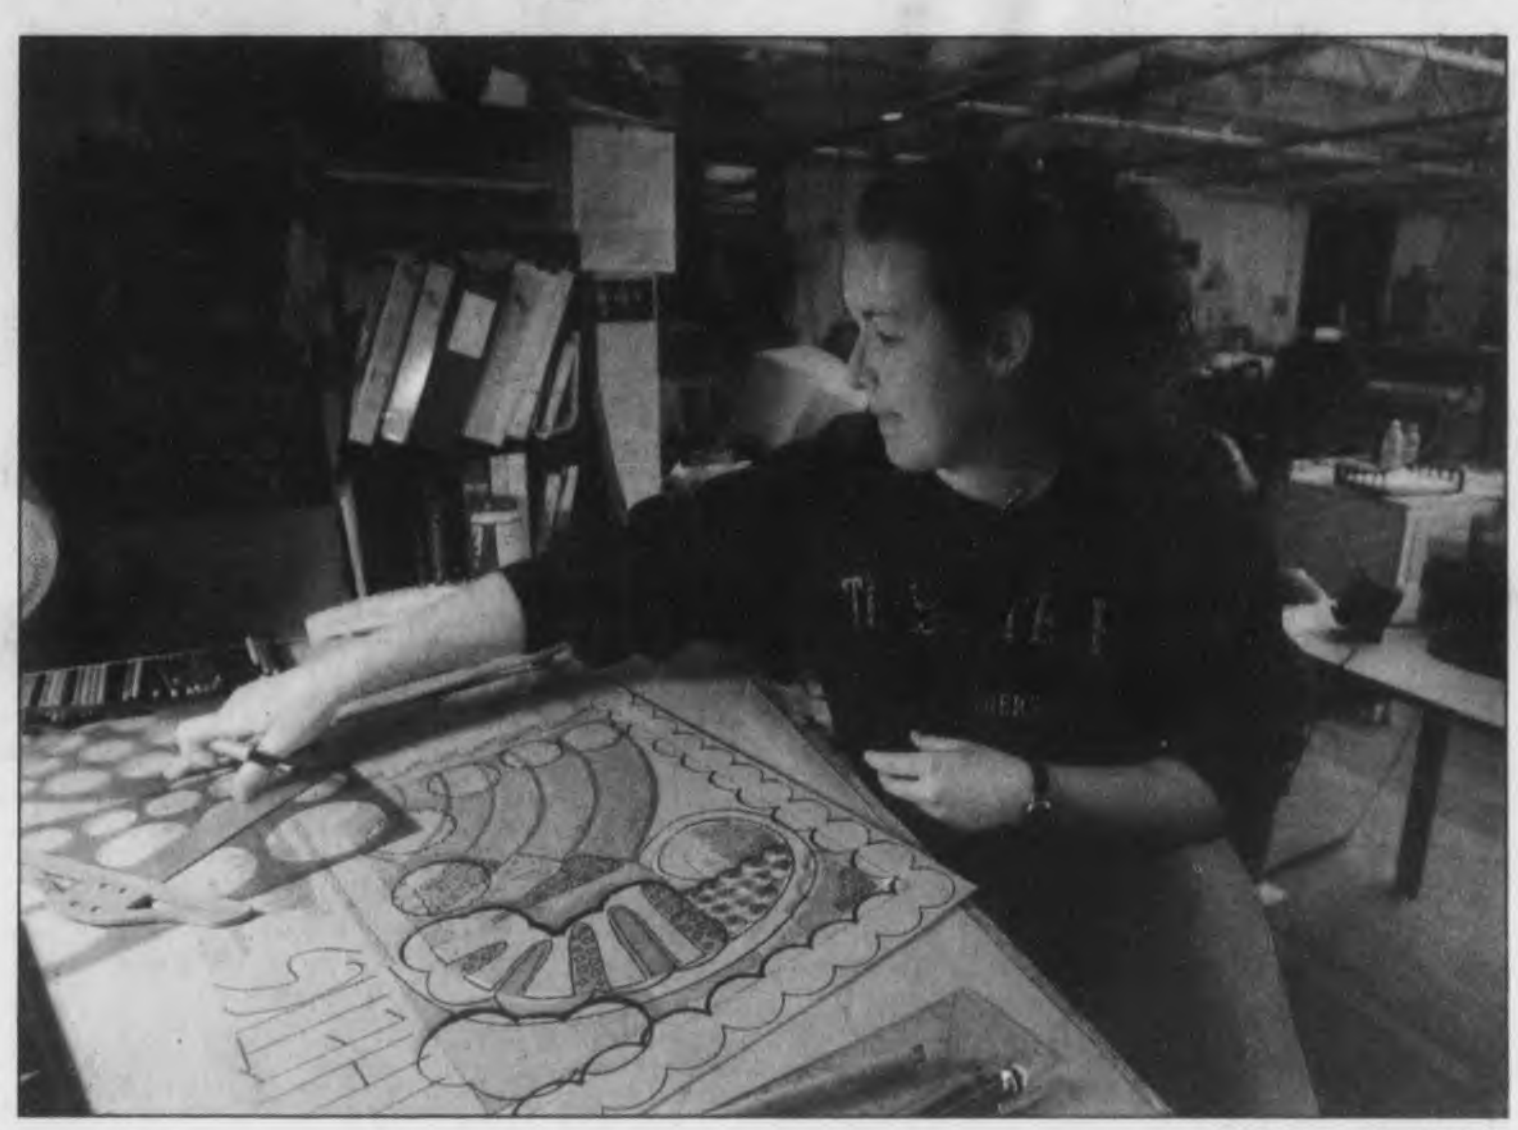
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

LAWRENCE, Kan. – A detective involved in the investigation of K-State professor Thomas Murray's involvement in his ex-wife's murder testified Tuesday.

Murray's K-State office computer was searched thoroughly in the week after the murder of Carmin Ross. The prosecution believes the results of this search point to Murray's guilt in the crime.



In the month before Ross's death, Murray had entered phrases in the Yahoo! search engine, including "how to murder someone and not get caught?" and "colorless AND odorless AND poison?"

Murray explained in his November 2003 taped statement that he was thinking about writing scripts for a crime scene television

Learning passion

Architecture students work late to finish projects

By Maria Ladron de Guevara
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Spending an average of 40 hours a week in studio outside of class time is routine for many architecture students.

Dan Donelin, department head in landscape architecture, said architecture demands more than just efficient time management skills and the sacrifice of sleep and social life.

It demands passion.

"It takes a tremendous passion to be in this major," Donelin said. "I'm impressed with the students in this college and their passion with learning."

Eric Diehl, first year in landscape architecture, said all of the sacrifices are worth it.

"K-State architecture is usually sixth in the nation," Diehl said. "A lot of firms prefer K-State because of the way they teach."

Diehl said of the people who graduate with an architecture degree from K-State, 106 percent get recruited, meaning that each student usually receives more than one job offer.

Donelin said the architecture program is demanding to prepare students for what comes after college.

"If you have a four-hour class, you can expect to spend 16 hours at studio outside of class," Donelin said. "But when you go out into private practice, you may be working on 15 projects a week."

Justin Cox, fifth year in landscape architecture, said that being in studio working with other projects hasn't necessarily affected his other classes.

"Other classes try to work the tests around the due dates of projects," Cox said. "I've never had a problem with it."

Monica Miller, third year in landscape architecture, said sometimes it's necessary to sacrifice sleep to complete her work.

"I try to get at least three hours of sleep a night," Miller said. "Some people drink a lot of Red Bull or caffeine because you're always working to stay up."

Diehl said he is one of those people.

"I drink a few cups of coffee to keep me up at night," Diehl said.

Jay Reppert, medical director at Lafene Health Center, said although people vary in the amount of sleep they need, the average is about seven to eight hours per night.

"Lack of sleep can impair the immune system," Reppert said. "People get sick more easily."

Cox said he does what it takes to get his project finished.

"If we have a project due soon, I will work on it from like 6 a.m. to 6 p.m.," Cox said. "But I haven't pulled as many all-nighters this year as I have before."

When caffeine doesn't cut it for students anymore, they come up with other ways to cope.

"Some people have cots, but I just sleep on a chair," Miller said. "I tell someone to wake me up in 30 minutes, and you're tired enough that the noise doesn't matter."

"I don't take power naps," Diehl said. "But I've seen plenty of people just lay down the floor and sleep."

Donelin said the architecture programs at

Eric Diehl, freshman in architecture, squares up his paper on his drawing board Friday evening in the basement of Seaton Hall. Diehl was attracted to the College of Architecture, Planning and Design because of its job placement for students after graduation.

K-State are nationally accredited programs, which is why professors and firms expect the best from students. Recently 60 professional offices visited K-State looking for architecture students.

"They know the work ethic of the students and they appreciate it," Donelin said.

New bill that reduces number of illegal immigrants passes

By Alex Peak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The House of Representatives passed a bill designed to reduce the number of illegal immigrants in the United States that has the potential to significantly affect Kansas.

The bill would make it easier for judges to reject asylum claims and prevent immigrants from using state driver's licenses as identification for boarding airplanes or entering federal buildings. The bill is intended to achieve greater homeland security.

Labor-intensive jobs have a gravitational pull for immigrant workers, Sgt. Troy Hensley of the Riley County Police Department said. Kansas, as a state, has many industries requiring manual labor and thus, with the new bill, may be significantly affected.

Some of the labor-intensive occupations include roofing companies, landscape, construction, destruction and farm work. Immigrants with poor English-speaking skills tend to cover lower level jobs with little direct verbal communication required, Hensley said.

"They come in spurts, a couple a month. Nothing extreme," Hensley said, referring to the number of illegal immigrants found in Manhattan.

Hensley explained that if an illegal immigrant is found and has committed a crime, the police detain him

HEADLINES FROM THE NATION'S UNIVERSITIES

Outhouse races draw audience from far away

MARQUETTE, Mich. – Winters in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan can seem endless, but 12 years ago, Trenary resident Toivo Aho hatched a plan to break the boredom. He sat in the Silver Dollar Bar in his tiny hometown recalling an outhouse race he saw in Washington and said an event like it would be perfect for breaking up the season and putting Trenary on the map.

"We called him the town mayor," said Outhouse Classic President Joni Constenius of the late Aho. "He was involved in everything from building new sidewalks to installing new streetlights. He worked hard at keeping our town prospering."

Two weekends ago, 12 years after Aho's vision, the tiny town of Trenary welcomed more than 3,000 people as it celebrated its 12th annual Outhouse Classic.

On the last Saturday of every February, racers sprint down the 500-foot track on Main Street with their handcrafted houses. This year's theme was "Let's Potty at the Dozenth Ever," and featured outhouses constructed of wood or cardboard. During the race, one two-person team takes off at a time. Racers in four categories, ages 12 and under, 13 to 30, 31 to 39 and 50 and over, compete for cash prizes based on time and outhouse creativity.

Northern Michigan University math professor Don Faust went to the races for the first time this year with his son.

"You've got all these people pushing these outhouses down the street, I find it kind of gross," Faust said. "But my son and I like to go to all these strange places, and this is definitely unique."

Dick Haley and Ron Schultz of Newberry have been to the races two years in a row and decorated their outhouse this year with plastic wrap and a mangled toilet seat.

"The cut-up toilet seat is for when half-assed relatives visit," said Haley, who spent time before the race passing out "poop" – chocolate-covered cookie dough.

But the competitors aren't the only winners at the Outhouse Classic. The event is also a fund-raiser. All funds went to benefit Trenary organizations such as the Superior Central School, the Head Start program, Trenary Fire Department and the Trenary Lions Club.

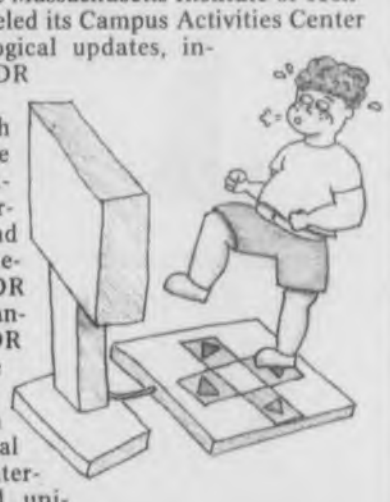
DANCE REVOLUTION

BOSTON – As other Boston schools and venues succumb to the "Dance Dance Revolution" craze by installing new machines at movie theaters, arcades and college social spots, the Boston University's DDR club members hope Boston University will follow suit.

While the days of Richard Simmons' "Sweating to the Oldies" and Jazzercise have passed, the fast-paced arcade game updates the practice of dance fitness by making its players sweat as they pound their feet to instructions on-screen.

Since its release in late 1990s, the game has acquired a small but enthusiastic following of about 15 club members that meet on a regular basis to play the game.

BUDDR Treasurer Julie Gendrano, freshman, said she has seen unexpected benefits in her physical stamina since beginning DDR.



"I've noticed that my cardiovascular endurance has increased enormously and I've been able to successfully ward off the 'Freshman 15,'" she said. "I definitely wasn't planning it, but the combination of walking to the arcade or to CAS (where the DDR club meets weekly) and actually playing DDR really helped out a lot."

The game combines music, technology and dance. Players stand on a touch-sensitive mat and follow instructions given to them on a computer screen to the beat of pop music.

BUDDR President Nils Bransz, sophomore, said although he has not noticed any weight loss, his endurance has increased.

"It has helped me keep my endurance and stamina high in times when I can't go out and run and keep in shape," he said. "It's not something I started DDR for, but it's a side effect."

In 2002, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology remodeled its Campus Activities Center with technological updates, including a DDR machine.

Though places like MIT, Northeastern University, Jillians and the AMC theaters have DDR machines, Bransz said a DDR machine would be a nice addition to BU Central for student entertainment and university fund-raising.

"DDR is a lot more healthy and fun than playing pool and watching TV," Gendrano said. "The school could generate a lot of revenue from DDR through tournaments and charging a meager price per set like 50 cents or so. A well-kept machine could pay for itself very quickly."

Senior named Truman finalist

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Victoria Luhrs will advance to the interview stage as a Truman Scholarship finalist.

Luhrs

Luhrs, senior in secondary education, will interview for the scholarship in Denver on March 18.

Luhrs is the second K-State student to be named a Truman finalist this year. Laura Wood, junior in political science and philosophy, will interview Friday in Kansas City, Mo.

The campus committee requested that Luhrs' application be reconsidered, he said.

"The campus committee felt like she just had a strong application overall," Jim Hohenbary, adviser, said.

Luhrs now will prepare for the interview that could land her a $30,000 scholarship.

Luhrs used the experience from her internship in Sen. John Vratil, R-Leawood to develop the policy proposal for the Teach for America program.

"The program has college graduates commit two years of public service at a high need, at-risk school," she said. "The Teach for America program usually has college graduates that are not education majors, so it's hard to meet the requirements of No Child Left Behind."

No Child Left Behind requires more qualified teachers, and Luhrs' policy proposal is to help ensure that the teachers for the Teach for America program are qualified enough.

"The proposal expands the Teach for America program for participants to make them better qualified by having more training," she said. "I'm proposing a nine-week training program."

After graduating from K-State, Luhrs plans to teach for a few years before returning to graduate school. She said she will pursue a master's degree in education policy.

After teaching she hopes to get a job in government.

Techniques combine in karate style

By Krystle Richard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The KSU Karate Club members practice Okinawan Goju twice a week to improve their skills and increase in rank.

The club has offered this technique since 1986.

"The name Okinawan comes from the Okinawan island in Japan," Maureen Kerrigan, assistant instructor and adviser, said.

The term Goju translates to "hard soft" to reflect the style.

"This combines hard techniques with soft techniques," Kerrigan said.

There are 10 levels below black belt.

Kerrigan, a second-degree black belt, said she has been instructing since 1987. She said women like this form because it doesn't require brute strength.

Kerrigan assists Charlene Anspaugh, branch master and third-degree black belt.

The group meets twice a week at Ahearn Field House for formal practices, however, informal practices happen once a week.

Tokai JuKu is a national organization where Kerrigan and Anspaugh learn what to teach.

There are four brown belts, three green belts, five white belts and five blacks belts, Kerrigan said.

Shannon Conner, junior in animal science, has been involved for seven years and is a brown belt.

Conner said friends in high school introduced her to Okinawan Goju.

"I wasn't even interested in this, but they dragged me into it, and then they dropped out," she said.

That left Conner as the only girl for a while, she said.

However, Conner said Okinawan Goju is a good way to relieve stress.

"It gets rid of those test jitters and frustration," she said.

Okinawan Goju is an extracurricular sport, Kerrigan said, and no credit is given for participating.

There is a $40 fee for each semester, but no experience is required, she said.

"You don't need coordination or any background with sports to come," Kerrigan said.

Another misconception Kerrigan addresses is strength.

"You don't have to be big and strong with lots of muscles either," she said.

FACULTY SENATE

Length of fall, spring semester could be 11 days longer if guidelines approved

Holiday break schedule up for possible revisions

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State Faculty Senate discussed both technology and the university calendar Tuesday afternoon.

Senate members debated policies and procedures that the University Calendar Committee submitted.

A large list of general operating guidelines were presented. The guidelines include how long fall and spring semesters will be, which days are considered university holidays and when fall and spring semesters will begin.

Debate began after a few members read that one of the guidelines stated fall semester begins in August, 10 days after the last day of summer intersession.

Some members were upset because they felt that was not enough time to move from summer intercession to fall semester.

Jim Dubois, calendar committee member and professor of interior architecture and product design, said the guidelines are just a framework on which to build.

"It is all open for discussion," he said. "Whether to allow the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday as a university holiday or to change Thanksgiving break is what we have discussed. We will continue to look at other calendars and bring in suggestions from other universities."

Dubois said K-State only had 89 days of attendance last year and the committee is trying to get it back up to the normal 100 or 101 days.

The motion was put on hold and will be up for discussion in the next meeting.

Tweed Ross, director of technology services for the College of Education, gave the announcements for the committee on technology. He said the committee is exploring the possibilities of classroom response systems across the university, which are already used in some classes.

The response systems have students use a controller to answer questions, and the instructor receives feedback.

The problem with the devices is that the room is too large and has too many students, and the system is unable to handle it.

Another item brought to the Senate's attention was the progress of the university enterprise portal, which would allow students to log in once and access several sites including e-mail and KATS.

"The first framework for the portal should be up and running this fall," Ross said. "It will be very preliminary, but hopefully in the future, it will not only provide access to the library, but remember where you were in the library."

Online grade submission should also be available in the fall, which allows professors to access the class roster and simply check the appropriate grade for each student.

Other motions carried included undergraduate course name changes approved by the College of Education and changes in graduate education.

A posthumous degree was approved for Dixie Spence. Spence died in an automobile accident in January. A request was made to award the Bachelor of Science in Apparel and Textiles to Spence after her death. The motion was carried by the Senate.

TO THE POINT

Students should vote, make their voice heard

Today is the last chance to decide who will be the future leaders of this campus.

All students vote for the student body president, vice president and their college senators and council members.

Senators and council members are there to voice the students' opinions in student government.

The student body president and vice president communicate with administration, local government, the Board of Regents and the state legislature.

Although the president and vice president do not decide on tuition increases, they can lobby to keep it low.

SGA influence does not stop there.

Student government leaders affect the daily lives of students with such ideas as establishing a university-wide honors program. SafeRide began through the Student Governing Association with the safety of students in mind.

The readership program was implemented by student government so students can read USA Today, The New York Times, The Topeka Capital-Journal, The Manhattan Mercury and The Kansas City Star for free.

Time is not an excuse not to vote. Log on to www.sgaelections.ksu.edu and make candidate selections.

It's not difficult and takes about five minutes.

Students, be a part of the democratic process and vote in this election.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Hell's Angels to Wild Turkey

Columnist reflects on 'Fear and Loathing' author, Hunter S. Thompson

J. SCOTT BOWMAN

Three Sundays ago, I was drinking rum at a local watering hole with my goodhearted roommate. We were full of various parts of chicken carcass and the booze was flowing.

Talk of going home was interrupted by an ESPN report that ESPN Magazine columnist and dean of gonzo journalism, Hunter S. Thompson, had passed away by an apparent self-inflicted gunshot to the head.

I was shocked.

Of all the ways that Thompson spoke of his own demise, shooting himself in the head in his "fortified compound" in Aspen was the least creative.

All kidding aside, I was saddened that I would never be able to read his fresh writing or, more importantly, meet the man.

But there was no time for tears, for some heartless bastard shouted, "Good riddance, that no-talented sonuvabitch."

I felt like leaping toward him, grabbing one of the several barstools available and bludgeoning the poor drunk.

But I resisted.

I realized that would make me just as much of a fool as he, and I was certain that one of his several bulky friends would return the favor. And martyrdom for the ignorant is not my thing.

I've never understood why so many people tend to despise an eccentric, private and talented man. With Thompson, you either admire him or hate his guts.

I'm sure he would want it no other way.

He was a strange and misunderstood man and a professional in the world drug circuit – something he wrote a lot about.

The drugs are a major turnoff for some people, but on the other hand, that was the curse for true Thompson fans.

In more than 40 years, Thompson picked up fans that admired his writing and those who reveled in the party lifestyle he led.

The latter are tasteless, no-talented ass clowns.

Those of us who admired the good doctor for his talents realized the relevancy of gonzo journalism.

For those of you who don't know, gonzo journalism is a brutally honest approach to the craft. It's present in his books "Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas," "Fear and Loathing: On the Campaign Trail '72," and "The Rum Diary."

His most noted use of gonzo was in his first book, "Hell's Angels."

For a year Thompson lived, partied and rode bikes with the heathen freaks.

In return, he got stomped by the barbarians and wrote a fascinatingly insightful (and critically acclaimed) book about the infamous gang.

It was a first-hand account of what a journalist could do if he had the balls to do it. That is one of the key reasons a true journalist would love Thompson.

He covered many other events, including the Super Bowl, presidential campaigns and the Kentucky Derby, in a new and fresh style reminiscent of Hemingway's.

For an easy summary, another good friend put it this way: Hunter did a lot of drugs, but so what? He was a fantastic writer, and people tend to focus not on the writing, but the drugs.

And I agree.

Thompson was always in search of the American Dream. All along, he was right in the epicenter.

Thompson described his large, strange attorney and cohort in "Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas," as "one of God's own prototypes. Some kind of high-powered mutant never even considered for mass production. Too weird to live, and too rare to die."

I can think of no other better way to describe Thompson.

It's too bad he's now extinct.

So next time you have some spare Wild Turkey, make sure you take one for good ol' Doc Thompson.

Here's to you, Hunter.

In-laws not as scary as movies portray, getting along possible

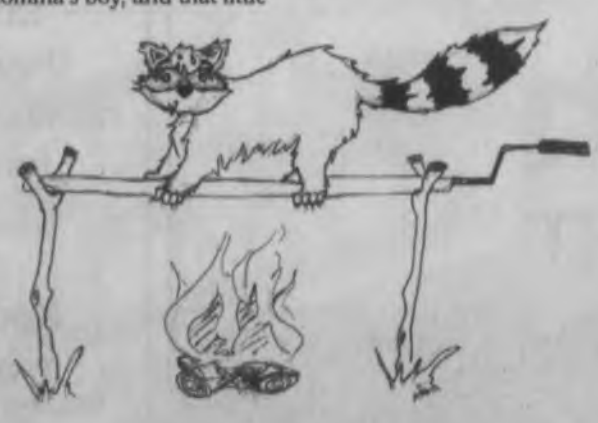
JULIA STOSKOPF

In-laws have been the source of endless clichés about mothers-in-law and the principal source of humor in movies like "My Big Fat Greek Wedding" and "Meet the Fockers." Are those clichés all in good fun, or is there an underlying theme here?

For some at K-State, in-laws are already a reality, but for other students who are single or dating, in-laws are a potential area of conflict that will be addressed at some point in life. A significant other will someday be the one and only, but there will be more than two people involved in the relationship.

Sorry, Romeo and Juliet are not always a reality, and suicide is not the most viable option.

As with every other potential area of conflict, in-laws are a force to be reckoned with. Yet, they can become as close as blood relatives and are sometimes a lot more entertaining.



Considering all this, certain aspects of in-laws must be inspected and evaluated before a happy couple decides to take its relationship to the next level; be that the second date, promised, engaged or married.

THE PARENTS

Mothers-in-law were the butts of bad jokes long before the movies exaggerated their image. The man of a girl's dreams was once a momma's boy, and that little girl may look for any excuse to pit the love of her life against his mother.

Tough call, but if handled correctly, mothers- and fathers-in-law can become one's greatest ally. Treat them with the respect and fear that they command, but go with the flow. Allow them to have a bit of influence over the relationship, but stay true to one's self.

Do not attempt to fool in-laws. This a lesson that every movie involving in-laws can teach. They will find out, and the future son- or daughter-in-law will become the jester instead of the magician.

Above all, if a child is as absolutely infatuated or in love as he or she claims, parents-in-law will eventually follow. Last week's advice still applies: if it worked for Gaylord Focker, it can work for anyone.

THE FAMILY

This includes cousins, uncles, aunts, brothers, sisters and the list goes on. Sometimes, just like "My Big Fat Greek Wedding," the immediate relatives can outnumber the other person's extended family.

Trust me on this one. My first encounter with the uncles and aunts and first cousins came within the first month of dating at a full family reunion that filled the basement of a nearby town's church.

One uncle brought barbequed raccoon.

Each one has the potential to become a friend. They can even become exactly like blood relatives – sometimes even closer.

The same rules apply here. Stay true. They are not assassins and – except in rare occurrences or comical movies – they really don't want to kill unless they must. Just relax, smile and nod. The jokes will eventually end – even the ones about walking casts, old girlfriends/boyfriends and tastes in food – or at least one will eventually gain the ability to joke back.

In-laws are not as scary as the movies make them out to be. Just follow the smile-and-nod rule until comfort sets in. In time it'll change from "My Big Fat Greek Wedding" to "All in the Family."

That will have its own set of absurdities, but until then, check the in-laws (an FBI background check or credit report is not needed) before that special someone becomes too significant.

I go to K-State, and this is for the guy who goes to KU: eh, maybe so, but you got your asses handed to you by the Tigers.

Forget student debts. The country is $5 trillion in debt that you and I are gonna get to pay off.

I mean, how else does a failed oil businessman take a $236 billion surplus and turn it into a $5 trillion debt?

If Rosie O'Donnell went to K-State, she'd be a Sigma Kappa.

I just saw the first skirt of spring.

I put my cell phone in my right pocket today instead of my left pocket.

Hey, greeks: stop calling in about ourselves. It makes us look retarded.

Do you have a roommate that won't take the trash out? Is it annoying you? If you don't have one, I have one you can borrow.

It's interesting that the Supreme Court does not think a minor can understand the issues of murdering somebody, but yet allow underage minors to kill their babies everyday.

Why do farmers go to college?

Wecker will never compare to Sproles.

Sometimes you just forget how damn good applesauce is.

Yeah, to the kid in my medical ethics class: please, shut up.

If the mother's a quarter and the daughter's a dime, what does that make 50 Cent?

Don't worry buddy. Taxation got me, too.

Intelligent design challenged

Critics say theory can't be regarded as scientific

By Maria Ladron de Guevara
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Members of the Division of Biology wrote a letter to the Topeka Capital-Journal telling the K-State Department of Education why they believe intelligent design should not be taught in schools.

The theory of intelligent design is based on the belief that an intelligent being created and directs the universe. This idea causes controversy because many scientists think it can't be regarded as a scientific theory and shouldn't be taught in science classes.

John Staver, director of the center for science education at K-State, said intelligent design is similar to the evolution controversy.

"Teaching intelligent design is basically teaching specific religious beliefs," Staver said. "This theory has not been scientifically proved."

Kathy Toelkes, director of communications for the education department, said the department has not yet reached a consensus about the issue and will not have an answer until this summer.

"We have the commissioner of education working on revising this, along with 26 members," Toelkes said. "We've been conducting public hearings to see how people feel, and the state board will decide what the outcome will be."

Kathy Martin, an elementary school science teacher and state education board member, said intelligent design should be an option for science teachers if they want to use it.

"I believe that intelligent design is a way of thinking," Martin said. "If it's approved, it doesn't mean we're going to teach it, we just want to allow critical analysis of the topic."

Walter Dodds, professor of biology, said the proposal to incorporate intelligent design into the curriculum will define science as a religion.

"Science isn't a religion, and religion isn't a science," Dodds said. "Science and religion are simply different, but not exclusive, approaches to viewing and interpreting different aspects of the world."

Staver said although it may not be directly implied, intelligent design leads people to believe there is a God. He said that even if everything from the Earth to the universe was scientifically proven, there would always be the question of who could possibly have created the universe.

"Science is an empirical way to explain empirical methods about nature," Staver said. "Science is not equipped to study God."

Martin said intelligent design should not be a mandatory part of the curriculum, but science teachers should definitely have the option to teach it.

"It's up to the teacher to decide how much they teach about a subject," Martin said.

Origin of universe under scrutiny

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The origin of the universe will be the topic of a lecture Thursday that will examine the big-bang theory.

Michael Turner, a highly renowned and respected cosmologist from the University of Chicago, will present a lecture titled "Cosmic Facts, Surprises and Mysteries: What We Know and Don't Know About the Birth and Destiny of the Universe."

It is sponsored by the Center for the Understanding of Origins.

Bharat Ratra, professor of physics, said the big-bang theory is a way of describing the beginning of the universe as a giant explosion that occurred about 13.5 to 14 billion years ago.

"The lecture is going to tell us sort of what the best description of the universe is – what we know about how the universe originated and how it evolved.

Sort of the modern creation story," Ratra said.

If you go

What: "Cosmic Facts, Surprises and Mysteries: What We Know and Don't Know About the Birth and Destiny of the Universe"
When: 2 p.m. Thursday
Where: K-State Alumni Center, Banquet Hall
How much: Free

Turner is a distinguished professor at the University of Chicago, and is currently the assistant director for mathematical and physical sciences for the National Science Foundation.

Dean Zollman, head of the Department of Physics, said Turner is highly respected and a well-known scientist.

"The fact that he is even willing to come is a big feather in our cap," Zollman said.

Ratra said that any student interested in cosmology or the origins of the universe should attend the lecture.

"There has been a lot of discussion in Kansas about the school board standards, and I think that it's important for people to know what scientists know so they can make informed decisions," Ratra said.

Zollman said the lecture also will be a good opportunity for students to understand that the big-bang theory is not a random guess.

"I've heard Turner give lectures before, and he does an excellent job at explaining why we know what we know about the universe," Zollman said.

The lecture will be the first in a series by the Center for the Understanding of Origins, an interdisciplinary center dedicated to addressing the origins of everything from languages to the universe.

Other lectures this semester will be presented by Robert Pennock, an associate professor from Michigan State University, on March 17; Sue Wessler, a professor at the University of Georgia, on April 1; and Spencer Barrett, a professor at the University of Toronto, on April 8.

CITY COMMISSION

Indoor recreational facility could include pool; site for center still undetermined

By Cynthia Hoffman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The City Commission was concerned with community needs as they addressed the Parks and Recreation Department assessment at its work session Tuesday .

"The new recreation changes and additions need to be aimed towards the community and be inclusive to the community," Mayor Brad Everett said.

On Sept. 14 the Commission asked the Parks and Recreation Advisory Board to assess existing recreation facilities, prioritize the needs of the community and develop a proposal for improved recreation facilities.

The advisory board has been working with the commission on the assessment for the past six months and wanted the commission to provide them with further direction.

"I would suspect that my colleagues and I will consider any suggestions the commission makes," said Parks and Recreation Advisory Board member Roger Brannan.

Currently, the board is trying to determine a site to develop an indoor recreational facility. The proposed sites are Griffith and City parks, as Riley County expressed no desire in having the facility located on county land in CiCo Park.

Marie Steichen, member of the advisory board, said it is important that the developed plan will maintain the character of the park.

"We need to honor our tradition of promoting quality of life by making additions that the public wants," she said.

Renovating the City Park pool or integrating the pool into the indoor recreation facility is another idea proposed by the board. Commissioner Mark Taussig said if the pool becomes part of the new facility, changes to the other outdoor pool will have to be made.

"At some point we need to decide what we are going to do with the City Park pool," Taussig said. "If we get rid of one pool, we are going to have to enlarge the remaining outdoor pool to accommodate the community."

The board also wants to develop a zoo education facility and a four- to six-field soccer complex.

The advisory board estimated the City Park Master Plan consultant cost to be $30,000 to $35,000.

The estimated square footage cost for a new indoor pool would be $350 per square foot and $200-$300 per square foot for a new outdoor pool. Renovating the City Park pool would cost $4 million to $6 million.

Ron Fehr, city manager, said funding for the indoor facility could come from many sources, one of those being the community if the facility is placed on a bond issue.

"Funding could be created by fee revenue, various partnerships and outside sources such as grants," Fehr said.

"Some funding will also come from community support on a bond issue."

TRACK AND FIELD

9 to compete at nationals

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The season comes down to this.

K-State's track and field team will conclude its indoor season at the NCAA Indoor Championships Friday and Saturday in Fayetteville, Ark.

Cost
JUNIOR

The Wildcats will send nine athletes to the meet – five from the men's team and four from the women's team. Three Wildcats are returning to the national meet – senior triple-jumper Chaytan Hill, junior high-jumper Kyle Lancaster and junior middle-distance runner Christian Smith.

Hill
JUNIOR

JUNIOR

Lancaster, a three-time NCAA All-American, is making his third appearance at the NCAA Indoor Championships. Lancaster said the men's squad is better than it was last year, despite finishing 16th in the nation.

"This year's team is definitely more talented than last year's team because last year we only had two people that went (to the national meet)," Lancaster said. "With five going this year, we have a better opportunity to score more points.

"We have a good shot to place in the top 25. I would almost guarantee that we will place in the top 25, and hopefully even in the top 15."

Coby Cost, a junior weight-thrower from El Dorado, Kan., is a first-time national qualifier. Cost has yet to lose an event this season, which is a streak he hopes to continue.

"I'm undefeated, and I really don't want to lose right now, so I'm just going to try and keep that streak alive going into nationals," Cost said.

Chaytan Hill is one of four seniors who will represent K-State. Hill, from Kirby, Texas, is a four-time NCAA All-America performer. She placed second at the 2004 championships, but said she wants to win a national title.

"I am not really looking at (the NCAA Indoor Championships) as my last meet because of the outdoor season, but I would like to win an indoor championship," Hill said. "If I set a personal best and don't win, I guess I will have to settle for that. But if I don't win and jump poorly, then I would be pretty upset."

The women's team also placed 16th at the 2004 NCAA Indoor Championships, and Hill said the team should be able place in the top 25 again.

"The team we took last year was more experienced, but I think we are just as strong this year," Hill said. "If we all perform well, it should not be that hard (to place in the top 25)."

Head coach Cliff Rovelto said he is proud of his athletes' accomplishments this season and he thinks all of his national competitors have a chance to score points.

"I think all those kids have done well this year," Rovelto said. "If they perform at the levels that they have up to this point in time, they are all capable of scoring points at the national meet."

Seven of K-State's nine national qualifiers did not compete at the Iowa State Last Chance Saturday because Rovelto wanted his athletes to be well-rested for the championship meet.

"We did not have them compete last week because we wanted them to be fresh for this week," Rovelto said. "I think it was good that we did not have them in the meet last weekend."

In K-State's NCAA Indoor Championship history, the men's team has finished 10th or better seven times and the women have three top-10 finishes.

Women's Big 12 tourney completes 1st day

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MISSOURI-62, KANSAS-57

Christelle N'Garsanet scored 19 points and grabbed nine rebounds to lead Missouri (11-17) past Kansas (12-16) 62-57 on Tuesday in the first round of the Big 12 Tournament.

EeTisha Riddle, who hit a pair of free throws to score Missouri's final points and seal the victory for the Tigers, finished with 14 points and eight rebounds. LaToya Bond added 12 points and nine rebounds for Missouri.

Crystal Kemp led Kansas with a career-high 27 points, also grabbing 11 rebounds. Erica Hallman added 19 points for the Jayhawks.

"Our kids really stepped up and got stops when we needed them, really made some big plays," Missouri coach Cindy Stein said. "Hitting those free throws at the end kind of just really helped us solidify things. I'm just really proud of them."

Next opponent: No. 1 seed Baylor

IOWA STATE-64, COLORADO-62

Lyndsey Medders made a game-winning 3-pointer with 0.2 seconds remaining Tuesday, lifting No. 18 Iowa State to a 64-62 victory over Colorado in the first round of the Big 12 Tournament.

However, Medders did not want all the credit.

"Don't give me too much credit. All I did was make a three," she said.

Katie Robinette added 22 points and 10 rebounds for the Cyclones (23-5, 12-4), who trailed 50-42 with 6:45 remaining.

The Cyclones will face No. 4 Texas Tech in the quarterfinals on Wednesday.

The loss ended the coaching career at Colorado for Ceal Barry, who led the Buffaloes for 22 years. She announced her resignation last month and finished with a record of 427-241.

Next opponent: No. 4 Texas Tech

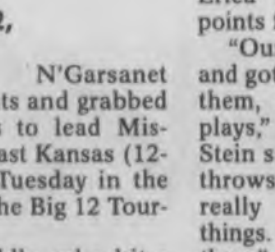
OKLAHOMA-86, TEXAS A&M-65

Leah Rush had 23 points and 10 rebounds to lead Oklahoma to an 86-65 win over Texas on Tuesday in the first round of the Big 12 Tournament.

After taking a 41-40 halftime lead, seventh-seed Oklahoma (17-11) opened the second half strong. The Sooners went on a 12-1 run to take a 53-41 lead over 10th-seed Texas A&M (14-14).

With 10:46 left, Oklahoma led 62-53, then went on a 7-0 run to take a 69-53 lead.

The Sooners shot 55 percent from the floor for the game and were 18-for-19 from the free-throw line. They held the Aggies to 41 percent shooting from the floor.



"I thought our intensity early on, our mental toughness, being able to fight them off when they're so hot from the 3-point line, which we did not expect, was outstanding," Oklahoma coach Sherri Coale. "In the second half relaxed a little bit, started getting some things going to the basket, opened the game up

Poker, spelling bees replace sports on cable channels

Give me back my sports channels.

Like the NHL, they are gone, replaced not by alternative programs like the all-intriguing Winter or Summer X-Games, but by events that do not require any amount of athleticism at all.

ANTHONY MENDOZA

Those athletes replacing the 20th replay of SportsCenter or the Best Damn Sports Show Period are poker players, world-class eaters, middle-school spellers, miniature golf players and dart throwers.

Hell, give me anything but this stuff to watch.

I'll even take the 1975 World's Strongest Man competition.

Who's not interested in seeing how long some freakishly-huge guy can dead-lift a Volkswagen with five women in it or how many times the athletes can squat 875 pounds of kegs in a wagon, as more weight is added each time a set is completed?

The people now ruling the channels are not athletes, so why do they keep on flooding the sports airwaves with them?

Sports casters are eating this stuff up, too.

They refer to Kobayashi as the world's greatest athlete while he downs his 34th hot dog in less than five minutes during the recent all-important Glutton Bowl. And silence comes over the audience and the announcer as we wait for the championship dart thrower to make his final fling.

Let's break down what are sports and what events you do when you're drunk.

Darts, along with poker, over-eating, bowling and for some, golf, are "sports" that should require you to at least have some sort of alcohol in your system to participate in and succeed.

The spelling bee could even qualify. You try spelling after drinking a six-pack – it's not that easy.

It takes skill only certain well-prepared "athletes" can attain.

Sports channels are always option No. 1 for me, followed by VH1, when I need to take a break from school or work, or when I need to find something to watch while falling asleep.

Last Monday, it was another late night at work, so what better way to complete that than by getting home and watching ESPN as I try to fall asleep knowing I have to wake up in three hours?

I flipped to the channel hoping to get a score, a replay of an earlier game or maybe even the seventh replay of SportsCenter.

Instead, I got a threesome.

The channel's new mini-series "Tilt", which depicts poker players as cheats and all-around scum-bags, tends to get a lot of airplay late at night.

Now I know why parental discretion is advised.

I have no problem with a threesome, just not on my sports channel. Keep that stuff where it belongs, like Cinemax.

This is what sports television has become.

A place that has too few sports to cover and way too many channels to show it on.

WBB | Koehn named Academic All-American

K-State senior guard Laurie Koehn was selected to the ESPN The Magazine Academic All-America Women's Basketball Second Team by the College Sports Information Directors of America.

Koehn

A native of Hesston, Kan., Koehn holds a 3.97 grade-point average in elementary education.

This is Koehn's second honor of her career. Last season, she became the first women's basketball player in K-State history to be named to the academic first team.

NFL | Kansas City Chiefs sign linebacker Kendrell Bell

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Former Pittsburgh Steelers linebacker Kendrell Bell signed a seven-year contract with the Kansas City Chiefs on Tuesday, Chiefs President Carl Peterson said.

Bell

No terms of the deal were released.

Bell, 6-foot-1, 257 pounds, was an unrestricted free agent after spending four seasons with the Steelers. He was the defensive rookie of the year and played in the Pro Bowl in 2001, after recording 88 tackles, nine sacks and a pair of forced fumbles in his first season.

Bell missed all but three games last season with shoulder and groin injuries.

MLB | Bonds says he will be ready for opening day

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — Barry Bonds expects to be ready for San Francisco's season opener on April 5, and the Giants asked the commissioner's office for permission to use a designated hitter during spring training home games in order to ease him into the exhibition season.

Bonds

"I've never missed an opening day," Bonds said Tuesday. "Being announced before your fans on opening day is great. The main thing down here is to be able to play nine innings consistently every day. That's recovery. When you can play every game in the major leagues for nine innings, that's recovery. Nobody is ever ready to completely play on opening day. It's the Adrenaline rush for opening day."

NFL | Moss passes physical with Redskins

ASHBURN, Va. — Santana Moss passed his physical with the Washington Redskins and is expected to be introduced at a news conference Wednesday once the trade for Laveranues Coles becomes official.

Moss

Team officials said the wide receiver Moss passed his physical Monday night, but Coles isn't due to report to the New York Jets for his exam until Wednesday morning.

The physicals are the final necessity to complete the Coles-for-Moss trade, a swap of two receivers who were unhappy with their respective teams' conservative offenses last year. The teams agreed on the deal Saturday morning.

NHL | League labor talks to resume this week

NEW YORK — The NHL Players' Association accepted an invitation from the league to return to the bargaining table later this week.

NHL commissioner Gary Bettman contacted union executive director Bob Goodenow late last week to request the resumption of talks, and the players' association agreed to get together, NHL chief legal officer Bill Daly said in an e-mail to The Associated Press on Monday.

A meeting was scheduled for this week, but the date, time and location was not announced.

Smooth transitions, techno sound debut with resident DJs

Technology has provided new ways of appreciating and producing music, bringing some new faces to Manhattan's music scene.

Brent Crampton, junior in journalism and religious studies at the University of Nebraska, appeared last month on one of the Turntable Tuesdays at PJ's Restaurant and Pub.

Crampton is featured on Omaha's "Ultramusique" record label with Glen Okada, a person who has performed with Carl Craig of the Innerzone Orchestra, hard-edged trance icon Christopher Lawrence and disc jockey Dan, formerly known as "that zipper track guy."

Crampton has been a resident disc jockey at some of his hometown's most diligent clubs: Bada Bing Ultra Lounge, Bar 415 and Velvet Lounge.

Following the "coming of age" for electronic music in the Midwest, after the end of the rave era in the late 1990s, local musicians are feeling a need to diversify in order to adjust to the nationwide move toward clubs, Crampton said.

Ethan Bowker, also known as Ethan Bliss, co-host of "The Saturday Night Rave" on KSDB-FM 91.9 and graduate student in computer engineering, co-hosts Turntable Tuesdays with DJ Just John.

"We want to showcase other DJs from around the Midwest," Bowker said.

Bowker said he decided to host Tuesdays because he thinks the Manhattan music scene has become too homogeneous, either showcasing local bands – "a good thing" – or Top 40.

Shane Talbot, or Blue, from Lawrence, will appear at Turntable Tuesdays in May.

Talbot said electronic music has found roots, in places such as Los Angeles, New York and the United Kingdom over the last 15 to 20 years.

"In the Midwest, electronic music is still only a five- to six-year-old phenomenon," Talbot said.

Dot Tucker, owner of PJ's, hopes to showcase a more diverse range of artists and quicken the process of bringing "club quality" DJs to Manhattan's bar scene, he said.

In Manhattan, students are familiar with "jukebox DJs" who play one song after another without mixing or blending, and when they attempt transitions, it is disjointed and disruptive for those on the dance floor – cause for dismissal at any of Kansas' clubs.

Poor transitions have gotten to the level of tradition at many of Manhattan's bars with dance floors.

"I DJ with more of a club style," Bowker said. "I try to mix the music so that there are smooth transitions with occasional layering."

He said he normally finds his records locally, at Sisters of Sound, a locally owned record store in Aggieville, and at Deep Fix in Kansas City.

"The DJs are really into what they do. I could tell they had a lot of passion in their work," Von Michaels, sophomore in physical sciences, said after attending Turntable Tuesday last week.

Adam Mertz, or N.9, local producer and DJ, has played shows with Sydeburnz and Blue, as well as with almost any Kansas DJ or venue in his nearly two decades of being involved with electronic music on the prairie.

"Finding someone who is both a good producer and DJ is a rare thing," Talbot said.

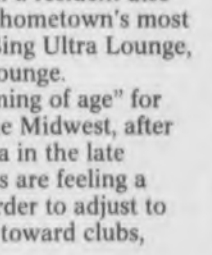
He headlined at PJ's in early February. Mertz has played at what was Elements of Taste and Silverado Saloon. He worked with Andrew Boie, a former K-state student in computer engineering and DJ on Wildcat 91.9's "Studio Sessions," with two CD releases since then.

Mertz has helped put on electronic music events at Manhattan's City Park Pavilion and done work with Amnesty International's fundraising through Manhattan High School.

He described himself as an old-fashioned synthesizer junkie who sounds like something out of a Neil Stephenson or William Gibson science-fiction novel, harking back to the days of 1980s cyberpunk.

Though traditional in the highly progressive world of electronic music, "his genius is undeniable," Bowker said.

Mertz, Talbot, Crampton and Boie have all worked with local production company, Syde-sho, based out of Topeka, started by Sydeburnz, whose real name is Jason Peters, vice-president of CD Tradepost.



"Syde-sho has given myself, Mertz and Boie our starts. Sydeburnz has done more to create the Kansas music scene than almost anyone," Talbot said.

Sydeburnz is scheduled to appear April 5 at PJ's.

Unwritten restroom rules govern men's urinal usage

ASK THE 5th YEAR

ADAM AKIN

Q: Myth or Fact. My cousin told me that her husband started taking their son to the restroom with him because he is the right age to learn the universal urinal rules. Do you guys really have these so-called rules, and are they as strict as they sound?

A: Yes, ladies, men do have these unwritten rules of the restroom. Let me go over them briefly. These rules apply mainly to the urinals and not the toilet stalls.

When you first enter the restroom, you need to take note of the position of other patrons at the urinals. You should try to find a urinal that is right next to someone who is already going to the bathroom. We can keep each other company. We try to check out each guy's stream to see which one appears to be the strongest. This will tell you who will be there the longest, because that person will need the company the most.

If all urinals are full, you should take position behind whichever person you think will be done first. You should stand as close as possible to the back of that person so that no one will cut in line. It is not uncommon for guys to wrap their arms around the person using the urinal so that no one cuts in front of them, and so that the person peeing will know that you are waiting.

Once a stall becomes available, take your place and settle in. You will want to do whatever you can to keep from splattering urine on your clothing. To avoid this it is customary to drop your pants to the floor and pull your shirt up over your head and tuck it behind your neck.

If another person approaches the urinal next to yours at the same time as you, which ever person starts peeing first is congratulated with a firm smack on the butt and an "atta boy." If three or more people arrive at joining urinals at the same time, it is good luck to lock arms together in the Congo line style until everyone is done.

While you are peeing it is perfectly acceptable to shuffle yourself backward away from the urinal to see how far back you can get and still hit your target. If you see someone else doing this you can either cheer them on or you can use your hand to block their streams like a basketball shot.

Once someone is done peeing, it is customary for the person next to them to reach over and help them shake once or twice before they leave.

After you are done peeing, you can't simply pull your pants up and walk out of the restroom. You must first walk down the line of urinals and high five everyone that is currently peeing. It is also polite to wish them luck. You can then leave the restroom, but whatever you do, don't wash.

Limp Bizkit singer suing Web site operators

Limp Bizkit singer Fred Durst is suing 10 Web site operators who posted the rocker's homemade sex tape after it was stolen from his computer — possibly by the same hackers who got into reality-television star Paris Hilton's cell phone.

Durst

The lawsuit, filed in federal court last week, seeks more than $70 million in damages and any profits the site operators reaped in recent weeks, when the 3-minute clip of Durst and a former girlfriend began appearing on the Internet.

In the complaint, Durst contends the 2003 video was never meant for public viewing. It was stored in Durst's home computer, but hackers managed to break into the computer remotely and make a copy, according to the lawsuit.

Dan Rather signs off CBS after 24 years

A polarizing figure to his last broadcast, Dan Rather signs off Wednesday on the 24th anniversary of when he took over as "CBS Evening News" anchorman from Walter Cronkite.

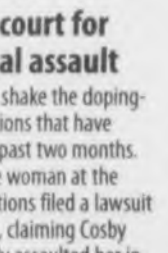
It's hardly a smooth sail into the sunset: A CBS affiliate was taking a vote among its viewers on whether or not to air the network's prime-time tribute to Rather, and in his last full week on the air, Rather finished a distant third in the ratings. He averaged 3 million fewer viewers each night than second-place ABC's Peter Jennings, according to Nielsen Media Research.

Rather's 24 years gave him the longest-running continuous tenure in the anchor chair for a network newscaster. Rather, 73, is becoming a full-time reporter for CBS' "60 Minutes" franchise.

On his final broadcast, Rather will end his series of reflections on some of the biggest stories he's covered — this time talking about the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, and then briefly talk to viewers about the end of his tenure, said Jim Murphy, the broadcast's executive producer.

Bill Cosby in court for alleged sexual assault

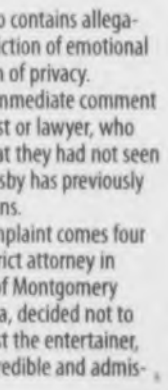
Bill Cosby can't shake the doping-and-groping allegations that have dogged him for the past two months.



On Tuesday, the woman at the center of the accusations filed a lawsuit in U.S. District Court, claiming Cosby drugged and sexually assaulted her in January 2004 and then defamed her when she came forward with her charges.

The lawsuit also contains allegations of battery, infliction of emotional distress and invasion of privacy.

There was no immediate comment from Cosby's publicist or lawyer, who said late Tuesday that they had not seen the court papers. Cosby has previously denied the allegations.



The federal complaint comes four weeks after the district attorney in Cosby's hometown of Montgomery County, Pennsylvania, decided not to press charges against the entertainer, citing "insufficient credible and admissible evidence."

THEY SAID IT

Lachey

"I've gotten this reputation for being cheap, which is the biggest crock of st, because I live in this huge house and I drive nice cars . . . Donald Trump would appear cheap next to [her]."
— Nick Lachey on his big-spending wife, Jessica Simpson.

Rock

"There's Elliot, who's a bad ass during the day, gay man at night. Not gay man at night, but in his private time, he likes to put on the cowboy outfit with the red boots."
— The Rock, on his gay character in "Be Cool."

"I have to work out hard to be as hot as I am. It's difficult for me and I want girls to know that."

Syrians protest Americans

500,000 Shiites demonstrate

By Tanalee Smith
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Nearly 500,000 pro-Syrian protesters waved flags and chanted anti-American slogans in a central Beirut square Tuesday, answering a nationwide call by the militant Shiite Muslim Hezbollah group for a demonstration to counter weeks of massive rallies demanding Syrian forces leave Lebanon.

Organizers handed out Lebanese flags and directed the men and women to separate sections of Riad Solh Square.

Loudspeakers blared militant songs urging resistance to foreign interference. Demonstrators held up pictures of Syrian President Bashar Assad and signs saying, "Syria and Lebanon brothers forever."

Other placards read: "America is the source of terrorism"; "All our disasters are from America"; "No to American-Zionist intervention; Yes to Lebanese-Syrian brotherhood."

Black-clad Hezbollah guards handled security, lining the perimeter of the square and taking position on rooftops. Trained dogs sniffed for bombs.

Large cranes hoisted two giant red-and-white flags bearing Lebanon's cedar tree. On one, the words, "Thank you Syria," were written in English; on the other, "No to foreign interference."

The demonstration was in front of U.N. offices. Hezbollah opposes the U.N. resolution drafted by the United States and France last year calling for Syria to withdraw its 14,000 troops from Lebanon.

Bush wants Mexicans off death row

By Hope Yen
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Bush administration is asking Texas and other states to conduct new hearings for 51 Mexicans on death row who said they were denied legal help from their consulates in violation of international law.

The International Court of Justice in The Hague last year ruled that the convictions violated the 1963 Vienna Convention by not providing the Mexicans with consular access. In 1969, the Senate ratified the treaty, which requires such access for Americans detained abroad and foreigners arrested in the United States.

The Supreme Court filing is an attempt by the administration to quell international criticism and comes a month before justices were to hear arguments in the case of Texas death row inmate Jose Medellin, who is challenging his conviction and sentence as a due process violation.

Medellin is backed in his appeal by dozens of countries, legal groups and human rights organizations, as well as former American diplomats and the European Union.

"Mexico is pleased with President Bush's action," said Arturo Dager, a spokesman for the Foreign Ministry in Mexico City. "It no doubt will have an important impact for Mexicans in the United States."

Donald F. Donovan, an attorney representing Medellin, said: "We welcome the president's commitment to ensure that Texas will provide Mr. Medellin the review and reconsideration of his conviction."

MURRAY | Detectives testify to Internet searches relating to murder found on professor's work computer show, which is the defense's explanation of the results from the Forensic Internet History Report done by Detective Robert Dean Brown. Brown also researched the Web sites and terms that Murray searched in this one-month period.

"I believe saxitoxin is a neuroagent. There were sites that indicated poison. Also indicated is that it has something to do with shellfish," said Brown.

One of the sites that Murray followed from the search results was a message board where members gave suggestions on what they thought were the best ways to kill someone.

While evidence was presented on Tuesday, Murray seemed very interested in the results of the report. He sat forward in his chair, took notes and was attentive of the testimony.

Detective Brown also testified about the pictures taken of Murray's K-State office, including his desk, computer and contents of specific documents. These documents included papers relating to John Benjamin's Publishing Company, which dealt with academic publishing in linguistics. An e-mail obtained from the forensics search also showed an e-mail relating to a book Murray was writing with colleagues. Attorney Angela Wilson asked Brown if there was anything in the search of Murray's computer that dealt with writing a crime scene novel.

"I did not see anything that indicated that," said Brown.

All Web searches were conducted in the month before Ross's death on Nov. 13, 2003. She was not found dead until Nov. 14, when the police were alerted by her fiance, Larry Lima, who lived in San Diego and was not able to reach her for two days.

Lima and Ross had exchanged rings and were planning to be officially married that Thanksgiving. Lima had planned on moving to Lawrence in December.

Ross and Lima met while at a conference in Wichita in 2002. According to Murray's taped statement, this is when his and Ross' marriage started to fall apart.

In June 2003, their divorce was finalized, but the custody issue concerning their 4-year-old daughter, Ciara, stirred up arguments between Ross and Murray. Ross wanted to move to San Diego with Lima, but had shared custody of Ciara and had decided to attempt to obtain full custody so the move to California would that be possible.

The two were in mediation sessions at the University of Kansas and attended their last session on Nov. 11, just two days before Ross' murder.

Ross, who gave a nine-hour taped statement on Nov. 14 after Ross' murder, was not arrested and charged with the first-degree murder until October 2004.

The prosecution's last witness will be called to the stand to testify today.

IMMIGRANTS | Limitations may affect Kansas jobs or her. If there are several illegal immigrants in custody at one time, Immigration and Naturalization Services will come and pick them up, Hensley said.

Don Berner, an attorney specializing in labor and employment at Foulston Siefken LLP in Wichita, said that it is not an easy task for an immigrant to enter the United States legally.

He summarized America's foreign policy by saying that immigrants could be allowed in the United States temporarily, based on their categorical work skill, family connections or if they have substantial knowledge or specialty in a particular area. Many of those wanting to move to the United States don't qualify in any of these categories and do whatever is possible to enter, even if the means are illegal.

In regards to how much Kansas will be affected by the new bill, Berner said that the effect will be based on how much the state of Kansas relies on labor from illegal immigrants. If the state relies heavily on labor from illegal immigrants, then it will been affected more significantly.

According to the American Immigration Lawyers Association's Web site, legal immigration to the United States totals about 800,000 per year.

According to the United States Citizenship and Immigration Services Web site there were about 7 million unauthorized residents in the United States in January 2000.

President Clinton returns to hospital for surgery

By Karen Matthews
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Six months after undergoing heart bypass surgery, former President Clinton will return to the hospital this week to have a rare buildup of fluid and scar tissue removed from his chest.

"I feel fine," Clinton said Tuesday in Washington, adding that he plans to play golf in Florida a day before the operation.

Doctors at New York-Presbyterian Hospital/Columbia University Medical Center, where Clinton is scheduled to have the procedure on Thursday, said the surgery is low-risk.

During the procedure, known as a decortication, doctors will remove scar tissue that is pressing down on his left lung. The surgery will be done either through a small incision or with a video-assisted thorascope inserted between his ribs.

The former president said doctors discovered the condition during a recent X-ray, and he called the surgery a "routine sort of deal."

In an interview with Associated Press Television News, Clinton said he knew before he went with former President George H.W. Bush to tour tsunami-devastated areas last month that he would be having the surgery. Doctors told him he would not be able to fly after the surgery, so he scheduled it after he returned.

"I feel fine. I just had a little fluid buildup after my surgery. It's no big deal."

Bill Clinton
FORMER PRESIDENT

Clinton said he will play in a charity golf tournament for tsunami relief Wednesday with the elder Bush.

"I feel fine. I just had a little fluid buildup after my surgery," Clinton told APTN. "It's no big deal."

Clinton's problem is a rare complication of his surgery, in which inflammation of the lining of the heart develops and fluid builds around it or in the lungs, said Dr. Craig Smith, who performed the bypass surgery on Clinton in September. He said it occurs in "a fraction of 1 percent" of cases.

Dr. Allan Schwartz, chief of the cardiology at New York-Presbyterian, said Clinton passed a full physical before going to Asia and scored in the 95th percentile for his age in a stress test.

Clinton, 58, had been quite active since his Sept. 6 heart surgery at Columbia-Presbyterian, presiding over the opening of his presidential library in Little Rock, Ark., and, more recently, joining the first President Bush for a public relations campaign to help raise private funds for the victims of the Asian tsunami.

Former President Bush said he had trouble keeping up with Clinton in Asia.

"You should have seen him going, town to town, country to country, Energizer Bunny here. He killed me," Bush said.

Clinton underwent quadruple coronary artery bypass surgery after suffering chest pains and shortness of breath.

In bypass surgery, doctors remove one or more blood vessels from elsewhere in the body and attach them to arteries serving the heart, detouring blood around blockages. The vessel typically comes from elsewhere in the chest, although doctors sometimes take one from an arm, a leg or the stomach.

Clinton previously blamed his blockage in part on genetics – there is a history of heart disease in his mother's family – but also said he "may have done some damage in those years when I was too careless about what I ate."

Clinton said he would return to work as soon as possible following the surgery.

"I'm going to slow down for the next couple of weeks," he said. "But I'm in good shape."

NEBRASKA-60, OKLAHOMA STATE-45

Chelsea Aubrey had 15 points and six rebounds to lead Nebraska to a 60-45 win over Oklahoma State Tuesday night in the first round of the Big 12 Tournament.

Oklahoma State (7-20) was within seven points with 2:25 to play, but two free throws and a lay-up by Nebraska put the game out of reach at 56-45 with 1:25 left.

Kiera Hardy had 13 points for the Cornhuskers (17-12) and Jelena Spiric added 10 points and eight rebounds.

Taleesha Conder led the Cowgirls with 14 points before fouling out with one minute left. Nina Stone added 12 points for Oklahoma State.

Senior Megan Mahoney, K-State's all-time leader in assists passes the ball in the Wildcats 73-46 win over Kansas on Feb. 26. K-State plays its first game of the Big 12 Conference Tournament tonight at Municipal Auditorium in Kansas City, Mo. The Wildcats have never advanced past the semi-final round in the programs history.

Seniors strive for tournament title

Wecker says team has 'nothing to lose' heading to Kansas City

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's women's basketball senior class of Chelsea Domenico, Laurie Koehn, Brie Madden, Megan Mahoney and Kendra Wecker have accomplished nearly everything during their careers.

The five helped K-State win a Big 12 regular season championship last season.

In four years, they have won 101 games, and individually they hold nearly every K-State record.

Still, one thing has yet to be accomplished during their careers.

A Big 12 Tournament Championship.

The opportunity to win it all begins tonight, with the chance to prove they can once again win the big game as they did earlier this year on the road at Texas Tech.

Like the previous three tournaments, the Wildcats were awarded a first round bye. In the last three tournaments, K-State beat each second-round opponent but has lost in each of its semifinal match-ups.

"We haven't won a tournament, and I think this year is a great opportunity for us to just go into that tournament and shine," Wecker, Big 12 Player of the Year, said. "We have nothing to lose. We're not the top seed; we're not picked to win the tournament. We just need to go in and play with reckless abandon."

In 2002, the Wildcats fell to No. 1 seed Oklahoma, 69-49. The following year, the No. 2 seed Wildcats lost to Texas Tech, and last year, they lost to the No. 6 seed Sooners in the semifinals.

Mahoney said the seniors do not feel any pressure to win in their last year, but they are taking it is as a challenge.

"We're going in with the mindset that this is our last year," Mahoney said. "Our seniors especially are very hungry, and we've fallen short of what we wanted to accomplish the last three years. We haven't gotten to that championship game. We have to go there and be mentally tough, and whoever we play, we just have to battle and know that this is it, this is the last tournament."

For the first time in two years, the tournament is back at Municipal Auditorium in Kansas City, Mo. The last time it was held there, K-State lost in the semi-finals but advanced into the Sweet 16 of the NCAA Tournament.

"We're excited to go back to the Big 12 Tournament and start up postseason play," Koehn said. "We're happy about the chance we have to go in there and make a little bit of noise and try to get a little further than we have in the tournament."

K-State women face Nebraska tonight

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The last time the Big 12 Tournament was in Kansas City, Mo., the K-State's women's basketball team was slipping into its glass slipper as a cinderella story in college basketball.

When the current crop of seniors Chelsea Domenico, Laurie Koehn, Brie Madden, Megan Mahoney and Kendra Wecker were freshmen in the 2002 conference tournament, K-State entered as the No. 4 seed, and even though the Wildcats lost to eventual champion Oklahoma 69-49, the Wildcats used the tournament as a stepping stone to reach the NCAA Sweet 16.

This year, an older and wiser K-State squad will try to accomplish what has eluded it for the past three seasons: a Big 12 Tournament Championship.

"It would be huge for us to go in and win the tournament," Wecker said. "We're not picked to win, obviously, so to go in and knock some people off would be great."

No. 17 K-State (21-6, 12-4) enters this year's tournament as the No. 3 seed, which gives the Wildcats a bye through the first round.

Sophomore guard Claire Coggins said receiving the bye can be a good thing for the team.

"It's always good to get a bye," Coggins said. "You don't have to play as many games to get to the championship. It gives us another game to prepare for our opponent."

The first game on the road to the championship will be against Nebraska. The Wildcats will play the Huskers at 8:30 tonight. Nebraska defeated Oklahoma State 60-45 in the first round.

Koehn said the game against Nebraska could be dangerous because of the attitude of the lower-seeded Huskers.

"We know that for them, in many ways, this is their do-or-die," Koehn said. "This is kind of their ticket to postseason play or not. We've got to come ready to go, and we definitely can't take them lightly in any way."

Although the Wildcats beat Nebraska in both regular-season meetings, Coggins said the Wildcats must realize anything is possible in this year's tournament.

"Every night, it's different. It doesn't matter if we've played them before," Coggins said. "The scoring deficit doesn't matter. It doesn't matter what a game ago was like."

Should K-State move past Nebraska, a potential game against Texas looms in the next round.

Texas will meet Oklahoma at 6 tonight.

However, the Wildcats said they are focused solely on tonight's game, and they are not looking ahead.

"It's the Big 12 Tournament, and of course you look at your bracket, of course you look at who you might get in semis, who you might get in your quarterfinals, but it's really one of those things where you can't look ahead because there's so much on the line and everyone is playing so hard and playing with so much on the line with their teams," Koehn said.

Wildcat basketball needs winning week

Pressure on men, women to succeed

JOSH WITT

For K-State basketball, the most crucial period in years begins with the Big 12 men's and women's basketball tournaments this week.

These coming weeks could change the face of both the men's and women's programs for years to come.

And no, that's not a bold statement. Both teams, to different degrees, have a final shot to prove their worth with massive change on the horizon if they don't.

For the women, make no mistake about it, the past four years have been a great time for all involved.

The jerseys of the two best Wildcat women's basketball players ever – Nicole Ohlde and Kendra Wecker – now hang in the rafters of Bramlage Coliseum, and there was a regular season conference co-championship and four-straight 20-win seasons.

Departed first team All-American center, Ohlde, Big 12 Conference Player of the Year forward Wecker, and the rest of this year's senior class has provided Wildcat faithful with plenty of outstanding moments this decade.

But there is a knock on this team.

The Wildcats haven't won "the big one" after the regular season ends.

Twice K-State has been seeded No. 2 in the conference tournament, and the team was seeded fourth in 2002, but the Wildcats have never advanced to the Big 12 Championship Game with this core of players.

The NCAA Tournament hasn't been very kind to the Wildcats either.

K-State did make the Sweet Sixteen in 2002, but the Wildcats could not make it past the second round in 2003 or 2004.

In all three years, they were upset by a team at least two seeds lower than them.

And yes, the Wildcats did get jobbed having to play the No. 7 seed Minnesota on its home floor last year, but that 19-point loss was a little extreme considering the talent K-State possessed.

Now is the time for K-State to excel when it counts the most. The sense of urgency is increased by the fact that Wecker, all-around sensation Megan Mahoney and three-point assassin Laurie Koehn are all in their final days as Wildcats.

Sure, there are good players waiting in the wings, but if the Wildcats can't get it done now, will it ever happen?

Oh, and there's just a little bit of pressure on the men's side.

Though the Wildcats should get a spot in the National Invitational Tournament (NIT) based on their above .500 record, six conference wins and a strong finish to the season, it is still far from a sure thing.

K-State needs a win over Texas A&M to assure itself a spot.

And for Coach Jim Wooldridge, a solid showing in the conference tournament and an NIT appearance will go a long way towards his job security.

Wooldridge should remain regardless, but nobody really knows what Director of Athletics Tim Weiser will do after the season ends.

If the Aggies blow out the Wildcats, it could mean a massive change in the program – a new coach, new players, the departure of some – and a return to square one in a league where it is so hard to move up.

Make no mistake about it, a ton is on the line in this year's version of March Madness.

When the women tip off tonight and the men get going Thursday against a tough Texas A&M team, the pressure to succeed and prove the haters wrong will begin.

Things could end very well for both teams this season, or they could end very bad.

There's not much in between.

K-State battles A&M in 1st round

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Before K-State's win against Nebraska on Saturday, Coach Jim Wooldridge said it was the most important game of the season, but Thursday's game could be just as important.

With postseason hopes and the job of their coach possibly on the line, the No. 10-seeded Wildcats (16-11, 6-10) face the No. 7-seeded Aggies (19-8, 8-8) at 6 p.m. in the first round of the Big 12 Conference Tournament at Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo.

"Anything can happen in the Big 12 Tournament," freshman guard Clent Stewart said. "You have to take it like every game is your last. We want to try to get as far as we can get and if we can get into the Big 12 Championship, anything can happen."

Despite a season in which K-State had a six-game losing streak and numerous close losses, the Wildcats finished with their best record since the 1998-99 season and their first winning record under Wooldridge.

Barring a win in the Big 12 tournament championship game, the Wildcats' best shot at post-season play is the National Invitational Tournament.

"We are thinking 'whatever we can get,'" senior forward Jeremiah Massey said. "Hopefully we can go into the Big 12 tournament and win a championship, but if that doesn't happen, then the NIT should be there."

In the nine-year history of the Big 12, only Baylor in 1996-97 failed to make the NIT or NCAA Tournament with at least six league wins and a winning record.

Wooldridge said no matter how many wins the Wildcats get in the tournament, K-State's chances of being invited to the NIT are good.

"We have a legitimate shot at it right now," Wooldridge said. "If we get a couple of wins in the Big 12 tournament, it would be icing on the cake."

Although K-State gained some momentum with its 73-53 win over Nebraska, and finished the regular season wining three of its last four games, the Aggies have also had a near-perfect record to finish the season.

Texas A&M has won four of its last five games, including wins against No. 4-seed Texas Tech and No. 5-seed Iowa State, and owns the nation's best turnaround with a 12-game overall improvement from the 2003-04 season. Texas A&M coach Billy Gillispie was also tabbed as the Big 12 Coach of the Year by his peers on Monday.

"They have played very physical, very hard and very consistent throughout the year," Wooldridge said. "They have really bought into what Billy is trying to do."

The Aggies won the only meeting between the two schools this season, 65-51, Jan. 22 at College Station, Texas.

Junior forward Antoine Wright, who was a first-team AP All-Big 12 selection, led the Aggies averaging 17.6 points per game overall and led the league in three-point field-goal shooting percentage (44.8 percent). Sophomore guard Acie Law and freshman forward Joseph Jones were also selected as honorable mentions.

K-State counters with a regular-season honoree of its own, with Massey being named to the second-team All-Big 12 team by the coaches and the AP. The 6-foot-7 Detroit native was fourth in the conference in scoring, averaging 18.8 points per game in conference games and has scored in double-figures in 18 consecutive games for the Wildcats.

The winner of Thursday's game will face No. 2-seed Kansas at 6 p.m. Friday.

Wooldridge said the Wildcats are playing their best basketball of the season heading into the tournament and a first-round win would be huge for his team.

"When teams win that first one, it builds confidence and it can carry you through the tournament," Wooldridge said.

Coaches predict tourney filled with surprises

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Fans might have trouble picking a favorite to win this week's Big 12 Conference Tournament.

The league's coaches sure won't do it.

During their weekly teleconference, coaches predicted an interesting tournament, as first-round action is set to begin Thursday with teams battling not only for the title, but postseason positioning.

No. 9 Kansas (22-5, 12-4) and No. 10 Oklahoma State (21-6, 11-5) are jockeying for one and two seeds in the NCAA Tournament, while the conference's No. 1 seed, Oklahoma (23-6, 12-4), looks to add a Big 12 Tournament Championship to the regular season conference title it split with the Jayhawks.

Kansas, the defending conference tournament champion Cowboys, the No. 17 Sooners and Texas Tech (18-9, 10-6) all earned opening-round byes.

The Jayhawks could be without second-team All-Big 12 selection Keith Langford for the tournament due to an ankle injury sustained in Sunday's loss to Missouri, Kansas Coach Bill Self said.

Despite having the conference tournament's top spot, Sooners' head coach Kelvin Sampson does not see any advantage.

"I don't think there is a benefit to being the No. 1 seed," Sampson said. "The league is so balanced up and down that anyone can beat anyone."

With their win at Oklahoma State over the weekend, the Texas Longhorns (20-9, 9-7) should have removed themselves from the NCAA bubble, but Iowa State (17-10, 9-7) and Texas A&M (19-8, 8-8) will likely need solid showings to get into the NCAA Tournament.

First-year Texas A&M head coach Billy Gillispie, who was tabbed Big 12 Coach of the Year by his peers on Monday after turning the team around from an 0-16 conference record last season, said he has not discussed with his squad what it needs to do to make the "Big Dance."

"I'm probably different than other coaches in that, no I don't talk about it," Gillispie said. "This year we haven't talked about 'must-wins', we've talked about 'must play wells.'"

Also battling for spots in the postseason are Missouri (15-15, 7-9), Nebraska (14-13, 7-9) and K-State (16-11, 6-10) – teams who will need to win the tournament to get into the NCAAs but

8 teams remain in position to win tourney title

March Madness has arrived, which means it's time to start printing out those brackets and penciling in upsets and champions.

MICHAEL ASHFORD

The madness begins with the conference tournaments, a sort of "mini-me" to the NCAA Tournament.

This year's Big 12 Women's Basketball Tournament is no different.

The tournament returns to Kansas City's Municipal Auditorium after a two-year hiatus, and it brings with it all the excitement and thrills from past years.

The Big 12 Conference is once again stacked with loads of talent, and no less than seven teams are capable of leaving Kansas City as the 2005 Big 12 Tournament Champions.

Baylor, Texas, K-State and Texas Tech earned the top four seeds respectively, giving them each a bye through the first round.

No. 1-seed Baylor has to be the favorite to win, since they are the regular-season champions of the league.

The inside post duo of Sophia Young and Steffanie Blackmon is as good as anyone in the entire country, and teams will have a very hard time stopping these two.

If Baylor plays well, no one will be able to stop them.

Texas is a puzzling team. With a 20-7 overall record, the Longhorns have the most losses of the top five seeds, but they finished the regular season as strong as anyone, finishing with seven-straight wins, including wins over K-State, Oklahoma and Texas Tech. Texas can play with anyone, and it isn't a stretch to say they will meet Baylor on Saturday for the championship game.

K-State was also dominant down the stretch, winning its last four games by an average score of 80-55.

Senior forward Kendra Wecker, the Big 12 Player of the Year, leads the conference in scoring and rebounding and makes life miserable for opponents with her versatility. If the Wildcats pick up in the tournament where they left off, a run to the championship game is not out of the question.

Texas Tech could be the real dark horse of the tournament, even though they are the No. 4 seed. Led by 6-foot-5 center Cisti Greenwalt, the Lady Raiders present huge problems for any team

Big 12 Tournament time

The year the women win

ANTHONY MENDOZA

This is the year, the year K-State's women's basketball team gets past the semifinal round and wins the Big 12 Tournament.

Things are once again clicking the way they were when the Wildcats ran off seven straight wins earlier this season, and not the way they were when they dropped three out of four.

Big 12 Conference Player of the Year Kendra Wecker does not have to carry the scoring load; she's getting help from the other starters and the bench.

In four straight wins to finish the conference schedule, the Wildcats have had at least three players in double figures.

In losses at home to Texas and on the road to Oklahoma, Wecker scored 28 and 29 points, but no other player was in double-figures.

Most importantly, senior Laurie Koehn is back on track and playing with a neverbefore seen mean streak.

She has hit 14 3-pointers in her last three games, picked up a technical at Missouri and nearly had her shorts pulled off at home against Colorado.

How did she respond to each situation?

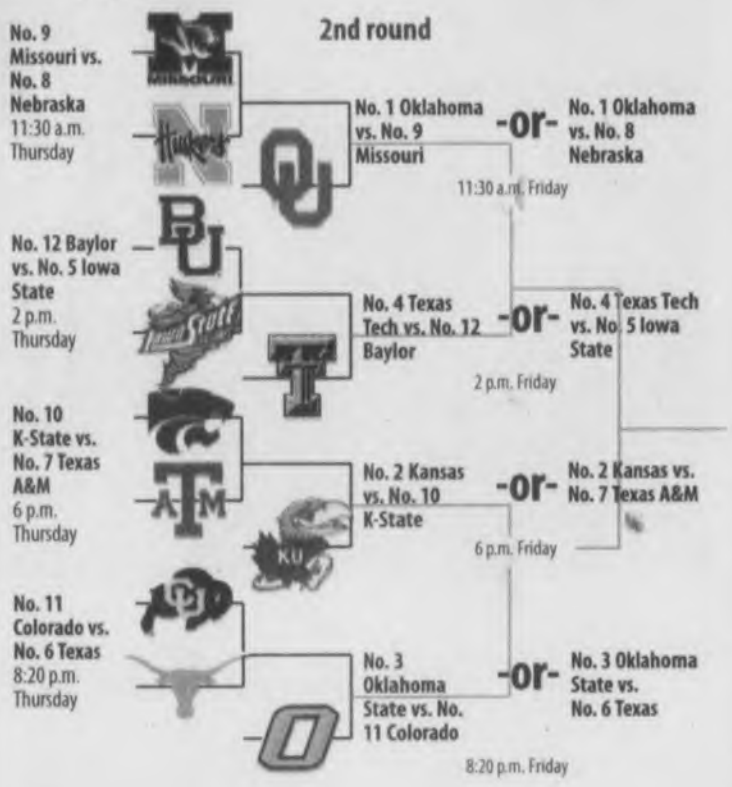
Against the Buffaloes, she adjusted her shorts and never thought once about passing the ball. She created her own shot off the dribble and knocked down a 3-pointer and stared down the referee.

After picking up the first technical in her life against Missouri, she made the Tigers wish the referees had never made the traveling call.

She responded by demanding the ball and knocking down two straight shots from beyond the arc. After the first one, she stared down the referee; after her second one, she left her hand in the air a bit longer than normal, just to let everyone know who made the shot.

It was vintage Koehn, except for the stare down, the technical and the pose.

If the rest of the team takes on her attitude, there is no reason why this team should not win the tournament.



They will they have the support of local fans, and it's also a place where they already played this year.

They would not play No. 1-seed Baylor until the finals, but will likely have to go through Texas, who they lost to earlier this year at home.

Can the seniors and coach Deb Patterson win a big game? We won't know until Saturday, but it will be the program's best chance for quite a while.

are in the running for a National Invitational Tournament bid.

K-State head coach Jim Wooldridge said on Monday he thinks the Wildcats might have sealed a postseason bid with their 20-point win over Nebraska to finish the regular season.

The Cornhuskers and Tigers can also make cases for postseason bids at this point, as both have wins over marquee opponents – Nebraska has a win over the Cowboys and the Tigers have the victory over Kansas.

And don't forget about the final two teams in the tournament.

Though the No. 11-seed Colorado (13-15, 4-12) is on a five-game losing streak, the Buffaloes have one of the conference's top freshman, Big 12 honorable mention guard Richard Roby.

Then there's No. 12-seed Baylor (9-18, 1-15), a team that returns to the conference tournament after being ineligible last season.

The Bears will not be the lone long shot at the championship if the past proves true again.

Since the first Big 12 Tournament in 1997, no team has won the title without a first-round bye.

Overall, with two wins separating the top four seeds, and the No. 10 seed just three games behind the No. 5 spot, the tournament could be wide-open from start to finish.

"I think you're probably going to see some upsets," Wooldridge said. "There's a lot of parody in our league. The top of the league is very strong, and there's a lot of balance five through 12."

WOMEN | Wildcats won't overlook Huskers

they play due to their size and quickness.

Iowa State and Oklahoma are the No. 5 and No. 7 seeds respectively, and both are capable of pulling off major upsets and making a run through the tournament. Oklahoma proved it could be done when they won the 2004 Big 12 Conference Tournament as the No. 6 seed, the lowest seed ever to win the tournament.

Iowa State struggled in its first round game against the No. 12 seed Buffaloes, as the Cyclones needed a 3-pointer at the buzzer to win 64-62.

Nebraska, the No. 6 seed, defeated No. 12 seed Oklahoma State 60-45, setting up a second round game against K-State, a team that the Huskers lost to twice during the regular season by an average of 20 points each game.

No. 9 seed Missouri beat No. 8 seed Kansas 62-57, and Texas A&M has been knocked out by Oklahoma 86-65.

The tournament should be an exciting one, and upsets are bound to happen. Even though Baylor is the favorite, Texas, K-State, Texas Tech, Iowa State and Oklahoma all have the potential to be the next Big 12 Tournament Champion.

Professor describes Murray's mannerisms

By Bailey DeReus
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

LAWRENCE, Kan. – Gay Lynn Crosby-Rubaker, former K-State English professor, testified in court Wednesday as the last witness for the prosecution in the first degree murder trial against Professor Thomas Murray.

Murray is on trial for the beating and stabbing of Carmin Ross, his ex-wife, in November 2003. He is on leave with pay from the university.

Through June 1996, Crosby-Rubaker was a colleague of Murray at KSU and described Murray as a friendly, supportive colleague.

Crosby-Rubaker said she frequently saw Ross and Murray, when they were married, during department functions and banquets and times when they would go to dinner together. She also described Murray's general mannerisms.

"I never knew him to be a violent man. He was mild-mannered and soft-spoken," Crosby-Rubaker said of Murray.

In 1996, she moved to Indiana, but kept contact with Murray and Ross. When the Murrays would visit family in Indiana, they would share a meal with Crosby-Rubaker and her husband. The last time Murray and Ross visited Indiana was in January 2003.

Rather signs off; broadcast media losing credibility

By Kerry Fischer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Dan Rather gave his last broadcast Wednesday, marking the end of a 24-year career on CBS.

Rather, 73, retired at the low end of his career. He took most of the blame for an inaccurate story on "60 Minutes" about President Bush's military career.

Rather's retirement is the second well-known anchor to retire in four months, following Tom Brokaw's retirement from NBC in November.

"He (Rather) made an honest mistake," Tom Grimes, professor of journalism and mass communications, said.

Grimes said broadcast news is not as strong as it used to be, due to increased competition within broadcasting. He said that broadcast TV now is more interested in gaining more viewers and more money and, as a result, has gotten lazy in its news coverage.

He also said that network news stations have struggled to keep up in the competitive market of cable news.

"Over-the-air TV networks don't fare well in this exceedingly competitive environment," Grimes said.

"They do what sells," Grimes said, saying that today's broadcast news media are all about ratings.

"The competition has gotten silly and kind of obscene – in a dignity sense," he said.

Steve Smethers, associate professor in journalism and mass communications at K-State, said that inaccuracies in journalism are fueled by competition, not only from other broadcasters, but also from the Internet.

ELECTIONS 2005

Burns wins presidency by wide margin

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This one wasn't close.

A year after three votes decided the winner, Michael Burns and Grant Groene won the Student Governing Association presidential election by 1,255 votes Wednesday night.

Burns and Groene won with 3,228 votes, or 62.1 percent, and Tyson Moore and Matt Wagner took 37.9 percent with 1,973 votes.

About 5 percent fewer students voted than last year.

The differences between Burns and Moore were not expected, Burns said.

"I was very surprised, but very pleasantly surprised," he said. "With the margin, we can have comfort knowing they probably won't contest the results."

Last year, results were contested because of the close results, voter fraud and illegal polling places, and election regulations were changed to prevent problems such as these happening. One of the changes included not allowing candidates to have students vote on Supporters of Michael Burns and Grant Groene didn't hear anything past, "The 2005-2006 student body president and vice president are Michael ...," before they erupted into cheers so loud that the election announcers could not be heard.

Burns and Groene were elected student body president and vice president with 3,228 votes over Tyson Moore and Matt Wagner's 1,973 votes.

"We did it; I'm extremely excited!" Burns, senior in agricultural education, said to the crowd at Rusty's Next Door.

"We're looking forward to this next year," Groene, senior in agronomy, said to supporters.

Groene said the pair's many appearances around campus contributed to their win.

"We went and talked to as many groups as possible," he said. Groene said he and Burns visited about 75 student organizations.

"We had a great support cast. We got their (students') concerns and

Moore, Wagner lose race

Weeks of working and waiting came to a somewhat anti-climactic end as it was announced that Tyson Moore and Matt Wagner had lost their campaign for student body president and vice president.

There was a brief silence ensued at Kite's in Aggieville, as the pair tried to find words to address their supporters.

Someone in the crowd said, "Good campaign," which was followed by a round of applause.

"You guys are incredible," Moore, junior in information systems, told his and Wagner's supporters. "Don't be disappointed at all. We got 1,000 people in the primary. We made it."

The pair came in second place in the primaries with a vote total of 1,072,

DIVERSIONS

A WASTE OF TIME — BUT HEY, IT'S BETTER THAN LECTURE

What are you learning?

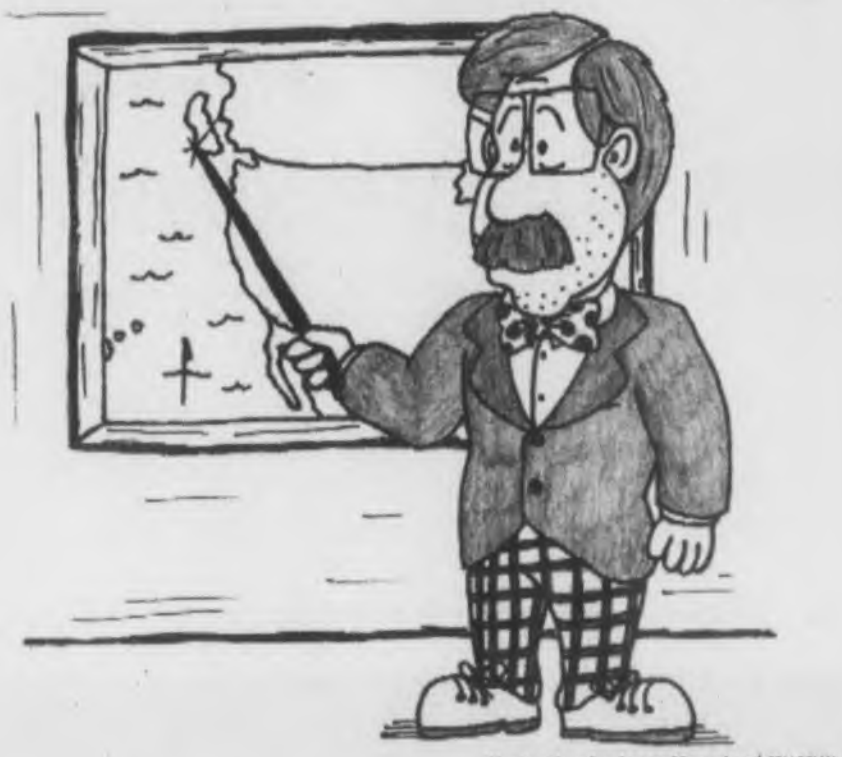

Illustration by Jesse Manning | COLLEGIAN

1. At the beginning of class what does your teacher do?
a. My teacher arrives on time, immediately gets my attention and gets to work.
b. My teacher shows up (sometimes on time), stands around for a while and shuffles papers to look busy.
c. My teacher skips as much as I do. When my teacher does show up, I get the same blank stare I give them.

2. When your teacher lectures, your teacher uses...
a. Power Point. Your teacher is technologically competent. The lectures are interesting, if you're into this stuff. It's the actual content that's boring, not your teacher.
b. An overhead projector. It's interesting to see some pictures, but your teacher makes you feel like you're still in the fourth grade. Don't forget the crayons.
c. A voice that makes Ben Stein sound like Rod Roddy. If you had something to look at or listen to that didn't make you want to jam a pencil in your eye socket, you'd go to class more often.

3. Contemplate the fact that you spend $137 per credit hour on tuition. Do you now think...
a. I'm getting the most bang for my buck. I'm getting Versace at Wal-Mart prices.
b. I wish I had a coupon for tuition. Or can I at least use my Dillons Plus Card and save more on gasoline or books?
c. The $100 I lost at the blackjack table last week seems moot now. And moot is a word I learned in a different class than this one. I want a refund.

4. How is the first day of class with your teacher?
a. My teacher is honest: It will be fun, there will be hard work and it will be boring at times, but we'll learn.
b. I get a sense that my teacher is lying when my teacher starts snickering after saying it will be fun. Plus the promise of class outside or in Aggieville seems too good to be true.
c. There's a rule that students must attend the first day of class, why not the teachers? I thought our teacher was another student joking around when he said, "I have nothing for you, go home."

5. Stop reading this for a minute and listen to your teacher talk. The voice sounds...
a. Smart as hell. She sounds like she took college seriously, and she truly sound like she knows what she's talking about.
b. Coherent. She probably was a better student than me, but I think I believe most of what she says. I feel certain she at least has a degree.
c. Dumber than me. Where did they find this person? They must have found this person living in the basement, and they figured they'd give her something to do.

If you answered:

A's for most of your answers, your teacher is awesome. When T-Val's come around, you will probably leave good marks and suggest a raise to department heads. Your teacher is so cool that you probably have his phone number in your phone book and his AIM screen name.

B's for most of your answers, your teacher is OK. Your teacher added you to www.thefacebook.com, but you chose not to accept the request. You feel bad after seeing that your teacher only has six friends, but you're certain he'll be fine since he belongs to a "K-State teachers rule" group.

C's for most of your answers, your teacher sucks — so much so that you can legally tell him that to his face. Also, you can make "<Insert teacher's name here> sucks!" T-shirts and distribute them to everyone in class.

Haiduk, Gorrell win Salina election by 50 votes

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Brendan Haiduk and Nathan Gorrell won the race for student body president and vice president at K-State-Salina Wednesday.

The pair defeated Josh Koch, junior in technology management, and Lindsey Boeckman, sophomore in airplane science, by 50 votes.

K-State-Salina had 227 students vote for student body president and vice president, 94 more than the primary election.

Haiduk and Gorrell based their campaign on communication, with hopes to implement a weekly forum and an opportunities fair for the beginning of fall semester.

Both Koch and Boeckman have expressed an interest in being a part of the president and vice president cabinet, Haiduk said.

"We're still working on plans, but we will implement them as soon as we're sworn in," Haiduk said.

Adam Volcek, K-State-Salina elections chair, said there were some senator spots not listed on the ballot, but to his knowledge, everything ran smoothly with the election.

"We're pleased there were bigger numbers than in the primary," Volcek said.

Koch plans on remaining an active constituent for SGA without holding an official title. He said that he has no regrets in running for president.

"I want to wish the other candidates good luck.

I am sure they'll take care of their good ideas," Koch said.

"Josh was a very worthy opponent.

I don't know why we won, but I'm glad we did," Haiduk said.

Write-in candidates forbidden

By Zachary T. Eckels
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students were not allowed to write in the candidate of their choice for the student body president and vice president offices.

This option has not been available to students for three years.

The reason for taking away this option is to assure a majority of the votes for the winning candidates.

"The general election is designed to pit the top two candidates against each other," Elections Commissioner David McCandless said.

Student Body President Hayley Urkevich said she had mixed feelings about it.

"Hypothetically, someone could run any way they wanted as a write-in campaign," she said. "On the other hand, students should have the opportunity to vote for who they want."

Write-in candidates have to follow the same rules as everyone else, but if they break any, they're only subject to them if they get elected, McCandless said.

"We can't really punish them unless they're elected," he said.

If they were elected, the punishment would most likely disqualify them from the election.

Bill Harlan, assistant coordinator for the Office of Student Activities and Services, said the election regulations were changed this term to disallow all disqualified candidates from being elected through write-in campaigns.

This isn't taking away any rights from the students, McCandless said, because they have their say during the primary election, where write-in votes are allowed.

"That's why we have two separate elections," he said. "The general election is designed to get a majority of the vote instead of a plurality."

Griffin becomes new assistant dean of diversity

Equality of students, variety of curriculum important issues

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The College of Education has named David Griffin the new assistant dean for diversity.

While the title is new to the College of Education, Janice Wissman, associate dean, said Griffin was already an advocate for diversity.

"He's a good fit because he has served in this role for several years," she said.

Griffin was appointed by the dean's office to help recruit diverse students. He said his new position as assistant dean gives him the opportunity to do what he has been interested in doing for several years.

"My love for equality, my desire to see everyone treated fairly and given an opportunity to be a part of our great society has always been my agenda," he said.

Although part of Griffin's role is yet to be defined, he said he has an idea of what he will be doing.

"Several entities will be to promote diversity within the college, recruit and retain persons of color in the College of Education, as well as include diversity in the curriculum," he said.

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN
David Griffin is the new assistant dean for diversity for the College of Education. One of the goals of Griffin's position is to attract a more diversified student body.

Despite the new position, Griffin said diversity is something everyone should desire.

"Everyone in the college is expected to incorporate it into the curriculum," he said.

Griffin said he must set the pace for those who succeed him in the position.

"I plan to be in this position a long time, but when I do leave, I would like to leave a legacy of understanding the importance of initiative of diversity, to get everyone to take an ownership of the development of diversity," he said.

TO THE POINT

Rather's career teaches lessons of failure, success

An American icon said goodbye Wednesday night after 24 years of newscasting.

CBS anchor Dan Rather retired from the "CBS Evening News" amid controversy surrounding the authenticity of papers said to address President Bush's military service.

Through his successes and his failures, Rather has taught important lessons to the nation and his profession throughout his career.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Following CBS' admission that it did not authenticate documents regarding Bush's service, there have been calls for Rather's job and accusations that he scarred the trust Americans had for network news.

Despite the controversy over the past year, Rather's mark on history is a poignant one and deserves respect.

Rather has covered the most momentous events of the past quarter-century.

Since taking over for Walter Cronkite in 1981, Rather has shared in pain and joy with the rest of the nation.

He has been one of the few constants through the Challenger and Columbia spacecraft tragedies, the fall of the Berlin Wall, the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks and two wars in Iraq, among other historic events.

NBC recently replaced Tom Brokaw on its evening newscast with Brian Williams. CBS has not yet named Rather's replacement.

The nation will be fortunate when CBS finds someone to fill Rather's shoes.

Freedom ideals spreading

Neoconservatism offers hope to the Middle East in form of democracy

In Lebanon, protesters have flooded the streets, seeking an end to the Syrian occupation.

In Syria, the foundations of the Baathist tyranny are beginning to shudder and creak against the collecting pressures of a population anxious for democracy.

GRANT REICHERT

What caused this discontent against Syria's repressive occupation? Well, there was the assassination of a popular former politician.

But that's not all.

In a meeting with Washington Post columnist David Ignatius, Lebanese politician Walid Jumblatt said, "It's strange for me to say it, but this process of change has started because of the American invasion of Iraq. I was cynical about Iraq. But when I saw the Iraqi people voting three weeks ago, 8 million of them, it was the start of a new Arab world."

Jumblatt is no American crony. His U.S. visa was previously revoked for calling Paul Wolfowitz a "virus" that needed to be destroyed. Yet now he credits the U.S. liberation of Iraq as "the start of a new Arab world."

For this, we can thank the neoconservatives.

After Sept. 11, 2001, Americans struggled to conceptualize the war on terror. Leftists interpreted the attacks as the natural outgrowth of American policies in the Middle East.

They preoccupied themselves with obsessively asking "Why do they hate us?" (a rhetorical device that allowed them to gloat over the darker aspects of America's past, but which offered no solutions).

Neo-conservatives rejected this myopic, egotistical worldview. They realized that, essentially, the war on terror is a war on the totalitarian mechanisms of the Middle East.

In totalitarian states, freedom is severely restricted. This leads to discontent among the populace, but no legitimate means exist in these states through which people could address this discontent, such as voting. Terror and other violent means become the only available options.

In order to prevent this violent internal discord from rupturing the totalitarian state, an external threat must be created by totalitarian governments to focus discontent elsewhere and to unify the population.

America, "The Great Satan," has been used by dictatorships as an escape valve for the pent-up frustrations of oppressed populations. Hatred of America has been fed to the people of totalitarian states to protect the totalitarian mechanisms within those states. These mechanisms must be destroyed.

If democracy is instituted, and people are granted the freedom to choose whether they want to dwell on anti-American hatred or get a job, become civically involved and advance their lives, the result will be good for America.

As is happening in Lebanon, freedom and democracy will spread. Dissidents in repressive countries will be emboldened by the examples of neighboring countries and by American support. Even now, Egypt has agreed to multiparty elections and Saudi Arabia is moving toward suffrage for women.

In Iraq, 93.6 percent of people support the actions being taken there against terrorism, according to a poll in the Iraqi newspaper Al-Sabah Al-Jadeed, and 76 percent now realize Arab media are negatively biased in Iraq. Thousands of Iraqis recently conducted an anti-terror demonstration, chanting "No to terrorism." Freedom is changing the Middle East.

A Lebanese blogger wrote the following on his blogspot Web site, "The Beirut Spring":

"We wear French perfumes, we drive German cars and we use American technology, but somehow when it comes to political solutions, we are made to think that our products should be Made-in-Arabia."

Neo-cons reject this provincial mindset; they realize freedom is universally desirable, and that the freedom of all people is inextricably intertwined.

Post Sept. 11, the internal operations of oppressive governments can no longer be ignored. This is the neo-conservative vision, and this is how we will defeat terror.

Senior wants refund for worthless classes

I want my money back.

Not all of it, of course. Just the cash I dropped on a couple of worthless classes here and there.

JAMES HURLA

Past experiences have taught me the need to demand nothing but the best.

My grandmother taught me that if you get anything but the best, it is your duty as an American and your God-given right to creep the hell out of everyone until they succumb to your wishes.

On the whole, I'm satisfied with my education at K-State. I'm mere weeks away from receiving the most expensive coaster I will ever own.

But there are some classes I paid good money for and made a good-faith effort to learn in, yet I received absolutely nothing of value from 16 weeks of mind-numbing boredom.

I realize a new policy would be expensive for the university to implement, but it eventually would even out, because each refund would come directly from the paycheck of the offending instructor.

For example, under the new system, my Expository Writing 2 instructor would owe me about $350.

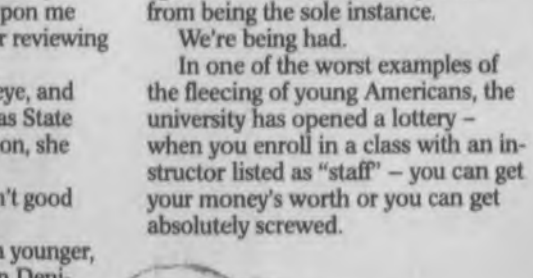
The extent of the lessons my instructor tried to impress upon me was when I sat next to her reviewing one of my papers.

She looked me in the eye, and with all the pride of Kansas State University's storied tradition, she taught me.

"Some people just aren't good writers."

Many readers picture a younger, goofier columnist sitting in Denison Hall and think, "Wow, that lady knew what she was talking about."

Apparently, the instructor decided it was better for me to move on with my life than it would have been for her to help me improve my writing.



Essentially, this column is entirely her fault.

She should give me the money I wasted on her class, and I should give her the kick in the face I forgot to give her that day.

While this obviously is only a snapshot of one crime committed against students, it certainly is far from being the sole instance.

We're being had.

In one of the worst examples of the fleecing of young Americans, the university has opened a lottery – when you enroll in a class with an instructor listed as "staff" – you can get your money's worth or you can get absolutely screwed.

And not in the friendly, Las Vegas way.

In all honesty, I probably would have settled for a simple letter, written in perfect form, apologizing for the hours of inane babble I sat through without benefiting in even the slightest way.

But since I didn't get that, I'm going for the gusto – I want the cash.

For financial aid purposes, students often take easy classes knowing they won't learn anything (i.e. jogging (KIN 126), poking stuff (HUMEC 578)).

In this case, students should sign a waiver to prove they knowingly and willingly are performing the equivalent of setting cash aflame.

But for those of us with higher expectations for our education, the university has a duty to serve its customers – the students.

I hope you saved your receipt.

To the cute boy in Anderson that just helped me with my gas tank: if you saw what house I was in, come over and I'll buy you a case of beer.

I have to say that I was walking to Cardwell yesterday, and I swear I saw this little green leprechaun running across the Quad. I don't know what that's all about.

St. Patrick's Day Specials

SafeRide to ask for an extra $11,000

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

SafeRide is in trouble.

The program, which shuttles students from anywhere in Manhattan to their homes, has been using more taxi cabs than expected.

The program will ask for an $11,000 emergency allocation stipend at tonight's Student Senate meeting. The allocation would be expected to fund SafeRide for the rest of the semester.

Katie Bartko, director of the program, said at a meeting last week that they expected to use five or six cabs a night, but have been using eight every night.

"It's definitely a good program," Bartko said.

Ben Fenwick, privilege fee committee member, said SafeRide needs the money.

"Demand for SafeRide has increased this semester, so they're using more cabs," Fenwick said. "As a result of using more cabs, they need more money, or else we would have to cut back on service."

The need for more money came to the committee's attention within the last month, he said.

"The committee was in full support, so we passed it out," Fenwick said.

"I think it should go through, because if it doesn't, the wait times to use SafeRide would drastically increase."

If you go
Student Senate
When: 7 tonight
Where: Union Big 12 room

Also on the agenda is a bill that will affect leadership positions in Senate.

Ben Procter, arts and sciences senator and one of the authors of the bill, said it would require those students who wanted Senate leadership positions be elected senators for the 2006-07 school year.

The bill would affect the senate chair, senate vice chair, committee chairs, faculty-senate representative and intern coordinator positions.

Currently these positions can be held by students not elected, but appointed, to the position – some of which are paid positions.

"My bill would make sure that students have a say on how their money is spent and who their money is spent on," Procter said.

"I think this is a great opportunity for students to have a bigger say in how SGA represents them."

SafeRide runs 11 p.m. to 3 a.m. Thursday through Saturday.

Professor discusses Bluemont Central College

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's campus now sprawls across 668 acres, but it all began with one three-story, 40-by-60-foot building.

That building, Bluemont Central College, was the subject of a presentation by Pat O'Brien, emeritus professor of anthropology, Wednesday night at Manhattan Public Library. The lecture was part of the celebration of Manhattan and Riley County's sesquicentennial birthday.

It was sponsored by the Manhattan Public Library and the Riley County Historical Society.

O'Brien first discovered the foundation of the building in 1995, when bull barns stood on the property. The barns have been replaced by the Founder's Hill Apartment Complex.

Archaeologists found the ruins because the grass growing above them was a different color than the rest of the lot.

The foundation is three feet deep and 18 inches thick. It was made of local lime mortar, O'Brien said.

Other pieces of the 1859 building have also survived.

Washington Marlatt used much of the building material for his barn, which still stands.

"You can look up in that building and see the tresses," O'Brien said.

Some of the stones from the building were used to construct the fireplace of the Alumni Center. A stone arch from the building is part of Hale Library. Also, the bell from the Bluemont College tower now stands in front of the current Bluemont Hall.

Pat O'Brien, retired professor of archeology, talks about "Digging Bluemont College: The Origins of Kansas State University," at the Manhattan Public Library for the Celebrate 150! lecture series.

Joslyn Brown
COLLEGIAN

Bluemont College was demolished in 1882 because the building was too far from the rest of the college and because the soil was not suitable for agricultural experimentation.

O'Brien said the building has additional historical significance. K-State was the nation's first land-grant university. Bluemont College stood on a plot which was part of that original grant.

"It's particularly sad to have lost that land because it's part of our claim to being the first land-grant school," O'Brien said.

Historic museum to raise money through book sale

By Nathan Dorsett
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One of Manhattan's historic landmarks, Wolf House Museum, is having a book sale to help restore Victorian carpeting to its halls and stairways.

Edna Williams, curator of the museum, said she wishes they had a larger building, and funds from the sale would help fund the desired space.

They are currently using a historical schoolhouse known as the Moses Cottage – one of Manhattan's first subscription schools – which has limited space as a one-room schoolhouse.

Restoring carpet is the museum's main need, Williams said.

"In 1885, they preferred rather large patterns with blue and mauve backgrounds with some gold throughout it," Williams said. "They liked floral patterns and swirls: big designs, Victorian."

Those interested can drop books off at The Wolf House, or if no one is available, they can leave donations on the screened-in back porch of the Wolf House.

The sale will have various items.

"We have records, children's books, science fiction and some collectibles," said Corina Hugo, museum registrar for the Riley County Historical Museum.

Williams said that it is normally crowded at the annual book sale, partially because of their shelf of signed, first edition and antiquarian literature, as well as an entire section of Kansas-oriented books.

If you go
Wolf House book sale
When: 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday and 1 to 4 p.m. Sunday
Where: Wolf House Museum, 630 Fremont St.

Book donations are being accepted through Friday and are to be dropped off at the museum.

Kansas City Chiefs taking strides to improve defense

NATHAN RYERSON

After two seasons of broken promises, the Kansas City Chiefs organization is finally doing something to better the team.

On Tuesday, the Chiefs signed unrestricted free agent Kendrell Bell to a seven-year deal.

Bell is a talented young linebacker who will come in and better a struggling defense.

Thank you!

Chiefs fans have only been waiting three years for the Chiefs' front office to do something to help this team win a Super Bowl.

My family and I have been season-ticket holders for 11 years and have gone home disappointed every year. The team has shown promise, but something has always come back to haunt us.

In the past, it was a kicker, but now, it is the defense.

(As a side note, I'd like to send a shout-out to ex-Chiefs kicker Lin Elliot - hey Lin, how is life as a stockbroker in Waco, Texas, treatin' ya?)

It has been nice for the past three years, since the Chiefs were in the top four in offensive production in the NFL.

Hopefully, after three years of not getting anywhere in the postseason, the people in charge of the team have come to their senses and realized they need to spend some money on the defensive side of the ball.

Last year's answer to the defensive problem was a new defensive coordinator and lots of hope.

Gunther Cunningham is a good defensive coach, but he is not a miracle worker.

The lack of defensive signings last offseason came down to denial in the minds of Chiefs President Carl Peterson and Head Coach Dick Vermeil. They refused to admit that the defense they put together was one of the worst professional football had ever seen.

The secondary was awful. Towards the end of the season, it looked like it came down to a game of rock-paper-scissors to see who was going to start.

However, I'm not saying that Bell is the answer to the Chiefs' prayers for this season. He isn't, but he is a start.

The Chiefs are still a few players short of a Super Bowl run. If the Chiefs are up for spending money now, they need to go out and get a shut-down corner.

The options are still out there. Why not go after Ty Law?

Law is the very definition of a physical, shut-down corner. He has skill and an intelligence of the game that Kansas City's current secondary can't even fathom.

As an added bonus, he might let team members wear one of the three super bowl rings he won in the last four years while with the New England Patriots.

The only thing the Chiefs defense got this off-season was a conviction for DUI and jail time. Thanks, Eric Warfield.

The last part of the puzzle to be completed is the NFL Draft.

The Chiefs have a long history of draft disasters. The best player they have drafted in the last five years, Larry "I took the diaper off" Johnson, has the job of backing up one of the best running backs in the NFL in Priest Holmes.

Peterson and Vermeil need to make good draft choices. Last year Kansas City needed defensive players, but management traded away its first-round draft pick. In return, the Chiefs spent their lower-round picks on as many offensive players as defensive players.

Does that make sense to anyone?

Kansas City needs to let go of the past and move forward, and so far, the Chiefs organization is doing what it can to move forward during this offseason.

MEN'S BASKETBALL

Record could be enough for NIT bid

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – At 16-11 overall and 6-10 in Big 12 Conference play, K-State might have done enough in the regular season to earn a bid for the National Invitational Tournament.

But as No. 10-seed K-State prepares to face No. 7-seed Texas A&M (19-8, 8-8) at 6 tonight in Kemper Arena for the opening round of the Big 12 Tournament, the Wildcats are far from content.

On Wednesday, senior forward and second-team All-Big 12 selection Jeremiah Massey said his sights are on winning the conference tournament to gain an automatic NCAA bid.

"In my eyes, we're still in it as far as the NCAA Tournament," Massey said. "We've got a chance to come up here in KC and, hopefully, we can run off four in a row."

The Wildcats could run into a brick wall against the Aggies, winners of four of their last five games and a potential at-large NCAA Tournament team.

Texas A&M is led by junior forward Antoine Wright, who was named to The Associated Press' first-team All-Big 12 squad after scoring 23.2 points per game and shooting 65 percent over the last five contests.

Texas A&M defeated K-State 65-51 in College Station, Texas in the teams' only meeting this season on Jan. 22. Texas A&M out-rebounded K-State 36-29 and scored 20 points off 13 Wildcat turnovers.

Fast Facts

- K-State has not won in the Big 12 Tournament since a 74-73 overtime win against Baylor in 2002
- Texas A&M has never won a Big 12 Tournament game
- Along with senior forward Jeremiah Massey's second-team All-Big 12 selection, sophomore guard Fred Peete was named to the All-Newcomer Team and sophomore guard Lance Harris was named to the All-Reserve Team.

"They out-hustled us, beat us to the rebounds in the second half – they did everything we were supposed to do," Massey said.

Though the Aggies defeated the Wildcats in January, K-State is a different team now than it was a few months ago.

The Wildcats no longer have forward Marques Hayden, and Coach Jim Wooldridge has gone with a smaller lineup in the last five games with sophomore forward Cartier Martin playing a post and sophomore guard Lance Harris starting.

"They have Cartier Martin playing the four now, so it looks like they've gotten a little quicker," A&M junior guard Chris Walker said.

Wooldridge said on Wednesday that Martin is fighting injuries to both ankles, bringing up the question of whether senior forward Justin Williams would start in his place.

Williams has scored in double-figures in his last two games, including a 12-point, nine-rebound effort against Nebraska.

But Wooldridge said he expects no starting lineup changes.

Twiggy McIntyre is fouled on a layup by Nebraska's Jina Johansen during the second half of K-State's win over the Huskers in the 2005 Phillips 66 Big 12 Women's Basketball Tournament. McIntyre scored 10 points.

Wecker sets Big 12 scoring record; Cats dominate Huskers

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – Big 12 Player of the Year Kendra Wecker scored a game-high 19 points and set the Big 12 scoring record in No. 3 seed K-State's 71-45 win over No. 6 seed Nebraska on Wednesday night in the second round of the Big 12 Tournament at Kansas City's Municipal Auditorium.

"The most important thing about this evening was our win and us getting the chance to play (Thursday)," Wecker said. "It's a great honor, but it's a record that someday will be broken."

Leading 9-4 in the early in the game, the Cornhuskers scored four unanswered points to cut the Wildcats' lead to one point with 14:30 remaining in the first half. K-State responded with a 16-0 run to push its lead to 25-8. During the stretch, Nebraska was held scoreless for nearly five minutes.

The Wildcats led at the half 41-17, holding the Cornhuskers to 20 percent shooting from the field. Nebraska's first-half point total was its lowest this season.

"We had a very difficult time scoring and couldn't seem to get anything to go," Nebraska coach Connie Yori said. "Credit to Kansas State for playing us with some good intelligence.

"They got out and ran and we wanted to try to up the tempo defensively, but it's difficult when you only score six field goals in the first half."

K-State (22-6) beat Nebraska (17-13) three times this year, all by double-digits. The win is the Wildcats' fourth-in-a-row over the Huskers.

Sophomore guard Twiggy McIntyre was the only other K-State player in double figures, scoring 10 points off the bench.

The Wildcats will face No. 2 seed Texas, who defeated No. 7 Oklahoma 65-59.

Earlier this year, the Longhorns defeated the Wildcats at home 64-60. Wecker scored a game-high 28 points in the loss and was the only K-State player in double-figures.

The loss snapped the Wildcats' 22-game home winning streak in Big 12 Conference play.

"Overall, as we face this great Texas basketball team, we will have to play significantly better in every aspect of the game, because what we brought to the floor wasn't enough to beat them," Coach Deb Patterson said.

TENNIS

8-game road trip begins in Oklahoma

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's women's tennis begins a marathon eight-game road trip this weekend with back-to-back matches against Oklahoma State and Oklahoma on the road.

The Wildcats enter the weekend with a three-game winning streak and are 1-0 in Big 12 play after beating Texas Tech last weekend. The road trip begins the longest stretch away from home that K-State has had since 1985 and ties the record for the longest in school history.

Head coach Steve Bietau said his squad won't approach this stretch of matches any differently than others.

"We really don't prepare any differently," he said. "We play under a lot of different conditions, even here – going from indoors to outdoors – and changing surfaces. It's not that big of a deal. Home court advantage is a factor, but maybe not as big of a factor as there is in some other sports."

If history has any say, it gives an edge to the Cowgirls. K-State has not fared well against Oklahoma State, with a 3-28 all-time record. One of the three wins came in Stillwater, with the other two occurring at neutral sites.

This year could be different for K-State, as the Cowgirls are 3-6 overall and 0-3 in conference play.

As for what the Wildcats need to do to take down the Cowgirls, Bietau cited balance.

"We need to continue to get the same kind of balanced effort we've gotten," he said. "We've been doing well at the top half of the lineup for most of the year, and that needs to continue."

One balanced effort this year has come from freshman Tamar Kvaratskhelia.

She collected her 20th win last weekend and became the second freshman to hit the 20-win mark since Petra Sedlmajerova did it in the 1999-2000 season with a record of 22-10.

Senior Maria Rosenberg hopes to inch closer to the K-State career singles win record this weekend. Rosenberg has 74 wins, putting her three wins shy of tying Sedlmajerova for first.

Rosenberg, Kvaratskhelia and the rest of the Wildcats won't play a home match until April 17, more than a month from now when the Wildcats take on Colorado.

WBB | Wecker on final ballot for Wooden award

K-State senior forward Kendra Wecker was named as one of 17 finalists on the final ballot for the John R. Wooden National Women's Player of the Year Award.

Wecker

The award will be announced on a national CBS telecast airing live at noon on Saturday, April 9, from The Los Angeles Athletic Club.

To be considered for the award, all players must have been accredited by their university as meeting the Wooden Award criteria, which includes making normal progress towards graduation and maintaining a cumulative GPA of 2.0 or higher.

Baseball | Blunt named Big 12 Player of the Week

K-State Senior outfielder Terry Blunt was named the Phillips 66 Big 12 Baseball Player of the Week on Wednesday by the media covering Big 12 baseball.

Blunt

In four games this past week, Blunt went 11-for-17 at the plate overall. In Friday's 17-1 win over St. Francis, Bunt went 5-for-5 with two doubles, four RBIs and four runs scored.

Defensively, Blunt contributed eight putouts without a single error.

The honor is the first for a K-State baseball player this season, and the third in Head Coach Brad Hill's two seasons.

Volleyball | Wildcats announce 2005 schedule

On Wednesday, K-State head volleyball coach Suzie Fritz announced the Wildcats' 2005 volleyball schedule.

The Wildcats will be host to 15 home matches, including the Kansas State Invitational, which will feature teams from Florida State, Houston and nationally-ranked Minnesota.

K-State will open the 2005 season against Arkansas, Nicholls State and Utah State in the University of Arkansas Invitational on Sept. 2-3.

The Wildcats home opener will be on Sept. 6 against Creighton.

MLB | Cardinals converting Ankiel to outfielder

JUPITER, Fla. — Rick Ankiel is ending a pitching career plagued by record wildness and will try to make the St. Louis Cardinals' roster as an outfielder.

Ankiel

Ankiel, 25, had yet to appear in a spring training game as he tried to revive a career interrupted by control problems and injuries. He was to have pitched in a "B" game Wednesday, but it was rained out.

"We are fully supportive of Rick's decision to convert to an everyday outfielder," Cardinals general manager Walt Jocketty said.

Ankiel missed most of the 2003 and 2004 seasons after reconstructive elbow surgery, and also sat out the entire 2002 season with a sprained left elbow.

CFB | Pruett retires as Marshall coach after 9 years

HUNTINGTON, W.Va. — Marshall football coach Bob Pruett retired Wednesday after nine years at the school.

Pruett

Bob Pruett's work at Marshall is surprisingly done just as the Thundering Herd are about to enter Conference USA.

Pruett, 61, told the team of his decision Wednesday morning and held a final news conference three hours later. Larry Kueck, Marshall's associate offensive coordinator and quarterbacks coach, will serve as interim coach.

Pruett is the most successful coach in Marshall history, going 94-23 with five MAC championships and five postseason bowl victories.

Furry friends

Research needed before buying pets

By Angie Service
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Furry, or sometimes scaly, friends live side-by-side with K-State students.

Scaly Dave's Herp Shack, a pet store in Aggieville, sells many common and uncommon pets.

"We sell a lot of reptiles that people can't get around here," owner Dave Karnowski said. "Our most unusual reptile might be the Australian Knobtail Gecko. Our most common pet, though, is the hamster."

Although the hamster is the most common pet sold at Scaly Dave's, some students prefer reptiles.

"I have two leopard geckos that I've had a year and half now," Jaime Joyce, senior in accounting, said. "They are very easy to take care of. The drawback to these lizards is that they live for 20 years – past the college pet phase."

Before buying a pet, it is recommended that a student researches different pets before going to the store, Karnowski said.

"I recommend that students research before purchasing," he said. "Make sure that you can fit the animal's needs. Avoid impulse buying, which can lead to improper care for animals."

Animals can be a big responsibility, but there are benefits to owning them.

"Taking care of an animal can help you mentally," said Ty Holborn, owner of Pets 'n' Stuff in Westloop. "Be sure that you can afford an animal, since school can be expensive and so can pets. Fish are good pets; so are small animals and birds. They are easy to take care of, and they are inexpensive."

If you can't give a pet the time it deserves, then don't get one at all, Karnowski said.

"Make sure you get something you can accommodate, something that you can somewhat neglect without it really being neglect," he said.

Before buying a pet, ask yourself these questions:

- Why do you want a pet?
- Do you have time for a pet?
- Can you afford a pet?
- Are you prepared to deal with fleas, scratched furniture and accidents?
- Can you have a pet where you live?
- Is it a good time for you to adopt a pet?
- Are your living arrangements suitable for the animal you have in mind?
- Will you be a responsible pet owner?
- Are you prepared to keep and care for the pet for his or her entire lifetime?

Soft-touch technique best approach to girls

One night last year, my friends and I were out doing what we love most: enjoying a night in Aggieville.

LACEY STORER

As last call was announced, my friend, Leslie, told us she would no longer need a ride home. She had decided she was going to make a night of it with a guy she knew.

"All right," our friend Liz told her, "but be careful. I hear he has an Iron Hand."

Sure enough, Leslie came back to report that Liz had been right.

When it came to handling a girl's most private parts, this guy ruled with a firm hand. A very firm hand.

He was, as my friends have dubbed, a "clit-smasher."

I'm bringing this up because I've had requests from both guys and girls to write about this topic. Girls have said to me, "Please, tell them what to do," and guys have asked me, "Please, tell us what to do."

So, here it is guys, one thing you should do when getting intimate with a girl. Or rather, one thing you shouldn't do.

If you are with a girl and you want to please her, the general rule is that a soft touch is best. Obviously, outer parts need to be handled with care, but I don't think a lot of guys realize how sensitive they are.

You guys need to remember that while your members can handle rough play, ours cannot.

Generally, girls prefer a gentle but firm touch. You want to make sure she can feel what you are doing, but don't grind it down into her pelvis.

If she happens to twitch or jerk suddenly, this is a likely indication that you have done something that hurts rather than pleases.

If you are unsure about how you are doing, and she isn't giving you any hints, then it is perfectly okay to ask her if she is enjoying it. A simple "how does that feel?" will suffice, and if she wants something to change, then she will tell you.

And if she tells you to change something, listen to her. For some guys, all it takes to get the message across is just saying, "A little softer," one time. But for others, it needs to be repeated until you finally have to physically push their hand away and say, "Stop touching me now."

Nobody goes home with somebody to have a bad time.

But getting your body mangled by someone with an Iron Hand is always a bad time. So guys, next time you are getting it on, remember that a gentle touch is a good thing.

Lacey Storer is a senior in mass communications. You can e-mail her at edge@spub.ksu.edu.

Israel, Palestine fail to agree on Jericho

By Lara Sukhtian
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERICHO, West Bank – Israeli and Palestinian security commanders failed in two meetings to reach agreement on the handover of a West Bank town to Palestinian security control on Wednesday.

The dispute, which threatens to deal a setback to a Feb. 8 truce agreement, centers on the scope of the Israeli pullback, particularly whether Israel would remove the main army checkpoint at the entrance of town.

With a new envoy heading to the region, an American official raised the possibility of U.S. intervention.

Plans to hand over Jericho and the town of Tulkarem in the coming days were announced Tuesday, after a late-night meeting between Israeli Defense Minister Shaul Mofaz and Palestinian leader Mahmoud Abbas.

Security commanders met for just 20 minutes Wednesday to discuss the details of the Jericho handover. Ismail Jaber, the Palestinian commander, said disagreements remained, and that negotiations would continue. But a second meeting broke up at nightfall with no agreement.

Israeli forces had rarely operated in Jericho and Tulkarem in recent months.

The Palestinians want surrounding areas to be included as well, but Israel has balked at removing major army checkpoints on the outskirts of these towns.

"The Israeli side, it appears, has no clear orders (from political leaders) to remove all checkpoints," Jaber said.

Israel agreed to turn over five Palestinian towns, including Jericho and Tulkarem, to Palestinian control as part of a truce announced at a Feb. 8 summit in the Egyptian resort of Sharm el-Sheik.

The handover has been held up, however, by a Palestinian suicide bombing that killed five Israelis in Tel Aviv on Feb. 25.

Tuesday's night's talks between Abbas and Mofaz were the highest-level discussions between the two sides since the bombing.

The deadlock over Jericho left the fate of Tulkarem up in the air and could spell trouble as the Israelis and Palestinians try to move forward to stickier issues. Jericho, a quiet town far from Israeli population centers, has been relatively quiet during the four years of fighting.

The dispute erupted a day before Lt. Gen. William Ward, the U.S. army general designated to monitor Israel-Palestinian security efforts, was to have begun work.

U.S. envoy calls for IRA to disband

By Shawn Pogatchnik
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BELFAST, Northern Ireland – President Bush's envoy to Northern Ireland called Wednesday for the IRA to disband, after the outlawed group made an unprecedented public offer to kill four men – including two of its own expelled members – linked to a Belfast slaying.

The envoy, Mitchell Reiss, told BBC radio in Belfast that the IRA's allied Sinn Fein party should accept the legitimacy of the police force.

"It's time for the IRA to go out of business. And it's time for Sinn Fein to be able to say that explicitly, without ambiguity, without ambivalence, that criminality will not be tolerated," Reiss told the BBC in the interview from Washington.

The Irish Republican Army, which is supposed to be observing a 1997 cease-fire in support of Northern Ireland's peace process, has faced weeks of embarrassment over its members' role in killing a Catholic civilian, intimidating witnesses and destroying evidence.

The case highlights the IRA's decades-old practice of seeking to impose its authority on the most hard-line Catholic parts of Northern Ireland.

The victim's family, which lives in an IRA power base in east Belfast, has waged a rare public campaign demanding that the IRA acknowledge its involvement in killing Robert McCartney, 33, and encouraging witnesses to give evidence to police.

The McCartneys' stand has forced the IRA to make a string of admissions, culminating in Tuesday night's declaration it had offered to kill four people the IRA blames for the Jan. 30 killing outside a Belfast pub.

"The IRA representatives detailed the outcome of the internal disciplinary proceedings thus far and stated in clear terms that the IRA was prepared to shoot the people directly involved in the killing of Robert McCartney," according to a statement from the group.

The McCartneys dismissed the IRA statement as irrelevant to their needs – to get the killers and accomplices convicted in a court.

They also accused the IRA of continuing to understate its involvement in the crime, citing confidential witness claims that up to a dozen IRA members held the pub patrons hostage while they swabbed up evidence. McCartney was initially attacked inside the pub, then had his neck and stomach fatally slashed outside it.

"It was that cover-up which prevented those who murdered Robert from being brought to justice," said a statement read by Claire McCartney, one of his sisters.

The British and Irish prime ministers, Tony Blair and Bertie Ahern, both denounced the IRA's offer as bizarre.

"It's an extraordinary statement and a shock to the system," Ahern said in Dublin.

Reiss specifically chided Sinn Fein leader Gerry Adams for his remarks during his speech Saturday to the party's annual conference. Adams, reflecting traditional IRA-Sinn Fein policy, claimed the movement wouldn't tolerate criminals in its ranks. He immediately qualified that position, arguing that the IRA wasn't committing crimes when it broke laws "in pursuit of legitimate political objectives."

Analysts say that view justifies virtually all of the IRA's activities, including its robberies, fuel smuggling and policy of maiming petty criminals within the IRA's Catholic power bases.

Reiss said he found that comment "particularly worrisome. ... You can't sign up for the rule of law a la carte."

Ahern said the IRA had a history of using death threats as a way of maintaining order.

formulated them into our platform."

The two noted the contributions of their friends, their schedulers and the people who designed their slogan and their Web site.

"Every little thing matters when it comes to running for student body president," Burns said.

The pair will take office in either three or five weeks, a date that depends on a Student Senate resolution. The first issue they will tackle after appointing a cabinet will be the contracted tuition rate.

Burns and Groene campaigned on a four-pillar platform that included a contracted tuition rate, a re-structured service fee, graduate teacher assistant workshops and online teacher evaluations.

Both said the competition was tough, but clean, through the primary and general elections.

"SGA finally experienced a very fair and clean campaign," Burns said.

They look forward to working with the other presidential and vice presidential candidates.

"We hope Tyson runs for Student Senate chair," Burns said. "Both him and Andrew (Treaster) bring a lot of quality to Senate."

But for now, the two just want to celebrate and relax until after spring break, when applications for cabinet positions are made available and the new Student Senate term begins.

roughly 600 behind Michael Burns and Grant Groene. In the general elections, Moore and Wagner trailed behind by 1,255 votes.

Moore and Wagner looked upset about the outcome of the elections, but they said that they were proud of their campaign.

Moore said one positive aspect of the campaign was meeting so many students and seeing how much they cared about K-State.

"We ran an awesome campaign. We met some incredible people; we worked with some incredible people," Moore said. "It was amazing to see that so many people really care about what happens at K-State."

The pair attributed their loss to the fact that more students wanted what Burns and Groene offered.

"Michael and Grant had different ideas for K-State than Matt and I did," Moore said.

Even though they lost this campaign, Moore and Wagner will not stop serving K-State. Both ran for positions as Student Senators, in the colleges of Engineering and Business.

Of the winning pair, Moore said he was confident that Michael Burns and Grant Groene would be successful as president and vice president.

Moore and Wagner said thanks to everyone who voted for them and said not to be disappointed by the outcome.

"We all have a common goal," Moore said. "We wanted to make K-State a better place, and we did that."

laptops at their campaign tables.

Elections Commissioner David McCandless said the changes in the election regulations helped the elections run smoothly.

"Everything went fine," he said. "The important thing is that the process is solid, and whatever results that come out of the process – no matter how close it is – is solid."

The results are unofficial and will not be official until they pass through Student Senate.

The newly elected candidates will take office in either three or five weeks, pending ratification of SGA by-laws. If ratified, it will be five weeks.

McCandless said ties will be resolved by the body candidates were running for.

"I'm pleased with how things worked out," he said.

RATHER | CBS anchor Dan Rather signs off

"Because things are so competitive and journalists are no longer the heads of major corporations, we find less respect for traditional journalism values," Smethers said.

Smethers said politics play a role in what kind of news is presented on TV and ratings are what drive broadcast media.

"Increasingly our media are becoming conservative because they are pandering to profits rather than excellence," Smethers said.

He said that politics painted Dan Rather in a negative light because he always took a liberal stance on his stories, including the John F. Kennedy assassination and the Watergate scandal involving former President Richard Nixon.

However, Smethers will always remember Dan Rather as "the person I trusted most during what was going on with Watergate."

Both Grimes and Smethers also said it was unfortunate that broadcast news has become so inaccurate.

"The real journalists are in print," Grimes said. He also said that real journalists do not find broadcast journalism friendly anymore.

Both professors agreed broadcast journalism does not have many strong role models in news reporters and anchors for aspiring journalists.

This shift in views from students has been apparent at K-State, Grimes said. He said that in the broadcast classes he taught prior to 1997, students came into his classes with clear career goals because they had clear career models on TV. After 1997, students entered his classes with many ideas about what constitutes broadcast journalism.

Smethers said the traditional ideas of journalism have disappeared.

"We've seen such a bastardization of news that we really don't have that much pure journalism anymore," Smethers said.

MURRAY | Prosecution rests case in murder trial

When Murray and Ross divorced, Murray kept in contact with Crosby-Rubaker and talked about concerns he had about custody of their daughter.

Crosby-Rubaker recalled that Murray was concerned about the "increasing unusual behavior from Carmin." He was also concerned about custody because he was aware how often fathers are granted custody. Crosby-Rubaker recalled that Murray "sounded depressed and worried."

She talked to Murray on Nov. 13, the day Ross was allegedly murdered, and said she thought he "sounded very good, better than he had before."

Rubaker talked to Murray and said he had expressed concern of how to inform Ciara that her mother had died.

According to Crosby-Rubaker, Murray had talked about the cuts on his hands that he said were from Ciara.

"It looks, by all the world, that I was holding a knife by the blade," said Murray according to Crosby-Rubaker. She also said his voice broke at one point and he said, "All I see is the blood, all the blood."

She saw Murray on Nov. 22, the day before Ross' funeral, and the next day Crosby-Rubaker called the police because of concerns she had.

When asked during the trial on Wednesday if it ever "crossed your mind that (Murray) was involved in the homicide," by prosecutors, Crosby-Rubaker responded, "Yes."

As the state ended its call of witnesses, the defense requested the judge drop the case because of the lack of evidence. The judge refused and the defense called Nancy Hughes to testify.

Vehicle didn't match Murray's

By Jesse Manning
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Thomas Murray's defense lawyers resumed presenting their case on Thursday, calling several witnesses to the stand on the 14th day of the first-degree murder trial.

Murray, an English professor at K-State, is charged with the murder of his ex-wife, Carmin Ross, in November 2003. He is on leave with pay from the university.

The prosecution has rested, and the defense began their second day of presentation by calling on the testimony of detectives involved with the case, Ross's neighbors and Murray's child custody lawyer.

Doug Woods, a detective with the Douglas County Sheriff's Department, visited Murray's Manhattan home on Nov. 14, 2003, the day Ross's body was discovered in her Lawrence home.

Six to eight months after Woods' visit, one of Murray's neighbors came to Woods with new information, saying that she recalled strong chemical smells coming from Murray's home.

Woods said that he and the other detectives who investigated the residence recalled no such smells, and no additional report was written. During cross-examination, the prosecution

Grant funds enforcement of drinking laws

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Riley County Police Department is cracking down on underage drinking for the rest of the semester.

RCPD recently received a grant from Kansas Department of Transportation's Bureau of Traffic Safety.

RCPD Sgt. Steve Boyda said the grant was applied for in February and received at the end of the month.

The new hours under the grant are 9 p.m. to 3 a.m. Friday and Saturday evenings in March, April and May, Boyda said.

Boyda learned of the grant while contacting KDOT about a different grant, he said.

"The grant came up at the last minute. We had no problems applying for it, and the state approved it without any hesitation," Boyda said.

The grant was a little more than $7,700. It will pay for 144 hours of officers patrol and two driver's licenses' scanners. When the grant expires, the scanners will remain part of the RCPD inventory.

"The grant will allow us to go out and be proactive in patrolling for underage drinking," Boyda said. "We are also going to patrol the bars more. Bar management will hopefully be more responsible in letting in underage drinkers."

Tom Addair, city prosecutor, said the grant is useful in Manhattan, since it is a college town.

"The ultimate goal of the grant is to cut down on high underage drinking," Addair said. "It is a large

State becoming focus of national news

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Google search Kansas, and it's apparent that the Sunflower State is making national headlines and book titles.

"GlobalFlyer completes record flight."

"BTK suspect charged with 10 counts of murder."

"What's the Matter With Kansas?"

Kansas has been making news and giving people plenty to talk about – both positive and negative.

Last week, world-class pilot Steve Fossett made history at the Salina Municipal Airport when he became the first person to fly around the world alone in the GlobalFlyer without stopping or refueling.

The event was not only beneficial for the millionaire Fossett, but also for the state, with media coming in from around the world and people buzzing about the state in daily conversations, said Nicole Corcoran-Basso, communications director for Gov. Kathleen Sebelius.

"The GlobalFlyer has been an incredible, amazing story for Kansas," Corcoran-Basso said. "That was incredibly good for us and it was great to have that spotlight on Kansas."

The event was so popular, she said, that close to 80 million hits were recorded on the GlobalFlyer's Web site.

Sue Peterson, governmental relations director at K-State, spent last week in Washington, D.C., and even there, people were talking about the GlobalFlyer, she said.

"I was eating lunch at the time the flyer landed and all these people wanted to know where he was and when he was landing," Peterson said. "It was buzzing in Washington last week, so it was positive for Kansas and great for Kansas State."

But not all news is good news.

After 30 years of investigation, Wichita police arrested Park City resident Dennis Rader and named him the BTK serial killer Feb. 26. Three days later, on March 1, Rader was charged with 10 counts of first-degree

Stories shining the spotlight on Kansas

December 2004: Lisa Montgomery case
Kansas resident Lisa Montgomery was arrested after she killed Bobbie Jo Stinnett, a woman eight months pregnant, and stole her unborn child. Montgomery's trial will most likely begin in April 2006.

February/March 2005: K-State professor Thomas Murray trial begins
The trial of K-State English professor Thomas Murray started Feb. 14. Murray is charged with the first-degree murder of his wife, Carmin Ross. CBS' 48 Hours is taping the trial.

February/March 2005: BTK arrested
Park City resident Dennis Rader was arrested Feb. 26 and named the BTK — bind, torture, kill — serial killer by Wichita police. A Wichita judge charged Rader with 10 counts of first-degree murder March 1.

February/March 2005: State board changes evolution criteria
The State Board brought the evolution debate to the forefront, with some committee members wanting to make changes to curriculum that would allow students to discuss and investigate all theories related to science, namely those related to the theory of intelligent design. The State Board Science Hearings Committee voted March 7 to proceed with evolution hearings, which are tentatively set for May 5-7 and May 12-14.

World-class pilot Steve Fossett made history March 3 when he became the first person to fly around the world alone without stopping or refueling in his GlobalFlyer, despite a large fuel leak.

SGA election process ran smoother, still not perfect

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Elections are finished, and all campaign displays should be disappearing. Candidates were to remove signs and other campaign material by 7 p.m. Thursday. Washing away sidewalk chalk will be left to the rain.

Although the election process was smoother than last year, it wasn't perfect. There was some confusion with K-State-Salina-Senate results, as some positions were listed twice.

Bill Harlan, assistant coordinator for the Office of Student Activities and Services, said this happened because Salina is in the process of switching codes for majors.

Students who started school with old codes still have them, and newer students have the new codes, Harlan said.

"We had to set up a ballot for the old way and the new way," he said.

Normally, OSAS would add the positions together, but they were having some technical difficulties, Harlan said.

Out of all names, there was only one that ended up on the results that shouldn't have. Melissa Martin, who the results showed winning a council seat for the College of Human Ecology,

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

BTK hearing postponed
A judge on Thursday postponed the scheduled preliminary hearing for Dennis Rader, the man authorities say is the BTK serial killer. Sedgwick County District Judge Gregory Waller agreed to delay the hearing to allow defense attorneys more time to prepare their case. The preliminary hearing is rescheduled for April 19.

Police find DNA link
A man who filed bizarre, rambling lawsuits over his cancer treatment and shot himself to death during a traffic stop appears to be the lone killer of a federal judge's mother and husband, police said late Thursday. DNA on a cigarette butt found after the killings matches that of Chicago electrician Bart Ross, authorities said.

Clinton out of surgery
Surgeons successfully removed fluid and scar tissue from Bill Clinton's chest cavity Thursday, cleaning up minor complications from the former president's heart bypass operation of six months ago. Clinton was "awake and resting comfortably" after four hours of surgery, said officials at the hospital said.

YOUR GUIDE TO THIS WEEKEND'S ENTERTAINMENT

1 | LUCK O'THE IRISH

Even though St. Patrick's Day is Thursday, there are several events going on this weekend. There will be a St. Patrick's Day parade 11 a.m. Saturday in City Park, a Blarney Breakfast at 8 to 11 a.m. Saturday at Kite's Bar and Grill and registration for the 27th annual St. Patrick's Road Race from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. The two-mile fun run starts at 12:30 p.m. and a 10K road race and three-mile walk at 1:15 p.m. If none of these sound appealing, go to Aggieville and drink green beer. Take food coloring in case the beer isn't green! What better way to celebrate the man who brought Christianity to Ireland than by getting drunk?

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

2 | BIRDHOUSE AND JAZZ CONCERTS

Danny Karp will perform on the piano for the latest Swing City Jazz concert at 8 tonight at the Manhattan Arts Center. Karp is trained in both jazz and classical piano and has performed throughout the Midwest. Tickets are $6 for students and $12 for the general public. Wichita songwriter Joe Strumpe will open for Nashville-based songwriter Craig Carothers in the next Birdhouse Concert at 8 p.m. Saturday at the Center. Tickets are $12 for students and $15 for adults. Tickets are available at the Center, the Dusty Bookshelf and Claflin Books & Copies. The Center is located at 1520 Poyntz. For more information call 537-4420.

3 | TESTING 1, 2, 3...

Two concerts will be recorded this weekend for future use. A music video shoot for B.F.R. Click. will be at 9 p.m. Saturday at PJ's Bar. Other groups will perform at the concert including Reggie B, Gator 9 Family and DJ Talz. Cover is $5 for 18 to 20 and $3 for 21 and over.
A benefit show for the T. Russell Reitz Regional Animal Shelter will be recorded for a live CD. Performing are Emma's Mine, Clap and the U.N.I.T. The concert begins at 9 p.m. Monday at Rusty's Other Side. Cover is to be announced.

4 | COOKIN'

The Korean theatrical sensation, Cookin', is a blend of martial arts, culinary expertise, dancing and high energy percussion. The group will perform at 3 p.m. Sunday at McCain Auditorium. Balcony tickets for the event is $18 for students and children, $30.60 for military and faculty, $34 for seniors and $36 for the public. Orchestra seating is $20 for students and children, $34 for military and faculty, $38 for seniors and $40 for the public.

5 | I'M TOO SEXY

Check out the latest styles at the fashion show 7 p.m. Saturday at Fort Riley. K-State students will be gracing the runway wearing American Eagle and Eddie Bauer. Admission is $7.

6 | BOOKS FOR SALE

Help the Riley County Historical Society raise funds for "Celebrate 150!" by buying books. "Celebrate 150!" is the sesquicentennial anniversary of Riley county. Books are being donated, until today, and will be sold at 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday and 1 to 4 p.m. Sunday at the Wolf House Museum at 630 Fremont St.

Cosmology professor lectures on theories of the origins of universe

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN
Michael Turner presents "Cosmic Facts, Surprises and Mysteries: What We Know and Don't Know About the Birth and Destiny of the Universe," at the Alumni Center Thursday.

Ever since people first looked to the skies, they have wondered where they, and everything around them, came from. This was the focus of the lecture presented by world renowned cosmologist Michael Turner Thursday afternoon.

Michael Turner, a distinguished professor in cosmology at the University of Chicago, is currently the assistant director for mathematical and physical sciences for the National Science Foundation and was invited to speak at K-State by Bharat Ratra, a professor in the physics department.

The presentation was sponsored by the provost's office and by the Center for the Understanding of Origins, an interdisciplinary center meant to address the origins of everything from languages to the universe.

The lecture began with Turner describing what science was-a human activity that is far from the sterile image many perceive it as. He stressed the fact that many scientific theories are constantly changing and evolving, with each new theory encompassing and improving on the old, always seeking a final, unifying explanation.

"The greatest adventure, that's what it's all about," Turner said. "Trying to understand the universe in which we live."

He also stressed the fact that theories are more then just made-up ideas; that they are confirmed through experimentation.

"It's facts and evidence that counts in science," Turner said.

The next part of the lecture discussed what is known about the origins of the universe and how that knowledge was discovered.

He began with a description of the solar system, then expanded to galaxies, and ended with the entire universe.

Turner described the origins of the universe using the big-bang theory. According to the theory, the universe originated as an infinitely small point of nearly infinite mass, which then began to expand at an unbelievably high speed, resembling an explosion.

In his lecture, Turner described how this theory was conceived and discussed some of the unknowns related to the theory, such as what existed before the big-bang and what the fate of the universe will be.

Matt Basel, a sophomore in chemistry, said that he expected the subject matter in the lecture to be more overwhelmingly scientific, but he felt like he still learned a lot from Turner and enjoyed it immensely.

"He's dynamic," Basel said. "He makes it sound like fun."

STUDENT SENATE

Senate approves $11,000 allocation to SafeRide

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate voted Thursday night to allocate an additional $11,000 to the SafeRide program because of concerns over too few cabs.

The program has six cabs; the allocation will increase that number to eight. Student privilege fees will reflect the increase.

SafeRide offers free rides to students with their student IDs from their location to their home between the hours of 11 p.m. and 3 a.m., Thursday through Saturday.

After a vote of 50-0-0, the Senate approved the funding increase. The recommendation was made as an emergency funding request by SafeRide coordinator, Katie Bartko.

Student Senate also considered a bill for the second time that would make the senate stronger through accountability and representation. The bill was held for referral and will be considered Thursday.

Ben Procter, arts and sciences senator, said that the bill is necessary because the Student Senate needs to be representative of the student body. The current system allows non-elected members to be appointed to leadership positions such as senate chair, vice chair, committee chairs, faculty-senate representative and intern coordinator.

"The senate can be made stronger through more interaction with students. We talked with students who aren't involved with the senate, and this grants an authority back to students in respect to the 11 most powerful positions in the senate," Procter said.

Procter said there are several reasons that the bill needs to be passed. One is that the senate will be able to represents constituents better through the bill's passing. Another, he said, is the financial aspect because the leadership positions are compensated.

Hayley Urkevich, student body president, said the senate has not forgotten about the drop policy on the books and how it will affect students. Urkevich said she met with Jackie Spears, president of Faculty Senate, to draft a proposal to take to Provost Duane Nellis.

"We are meeting with the provost next week, and this hopefully will take care of our concerns with that," Urkevich said.

TO THE POINT

Grant allows police to enforce alcohol laws more efficiently

Students are going to see a stronger and more aggressive push by the Riley County Police Department to curb underage drinking.

Underage drinking is a problem that is universal in most university settings. A new grant recently awarded to the police department will allow it and its officers to enforce alcohol laws more efficiently.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

With extra money for additional patrols and two driver's license scanners, the police department can take a more aggressive stance against minors in possession of alcohol.

Alcohol is a drug that affects motor skills and impairs judgment. Underage drinkers are not responsible adults – they are simply breaking the law. Additionally, the consequences of underage drinking can vary in severity from engaging in risky sexual activity to unintentional injury or death associated with driving drunk.

This coordinated effort to clamp down on minors will help to decrease the number of underage drinkers sneaking into bars and having access to alcohol. Also, ID scanners will cut down on the number of fake IDs used to enter to bars.

In most cases, minors who are punished for their actions will be less likely to engage in underage drinking again. This new grant and the improvements in detecting underage drinking it will bring is a positive step by the Riley County Police Department that should be applauded and supported.

The countdown begins

Columnist anticipates good times, green beer as graduation nears

It has officially hit me.

Not the hateful comments directed towards me in the Fourum and the so called "fan mail" that I receive every week.

ABBY HILES

No, my faithful readers, I am talking about the ever-looming graduation and my last two months here at this great institution.

In only nine short weeks, I, like thousands of others accepting their diplomas in May, will be bidding this campus farewell in lieu of bigger cities and an adult life, the latter of which most of us may never fully achieve.

With so much charged into these last days, before we know it graduation will be upon us and then-the real world.

So in the spirit of my last semester, let me break down the next nine weeks in true countdown form so together we can either savor or speed up the time we have left here in Manhappenin'.

WEEK 9

The last St. Patrick's Day in Manhattan. Who cares what happens the rest of the week? On Thursday, head on down to the bars for some cheap green beer and good ol' St. Paddy's Day fun. And if I happen to be at Rusty's, ditch-sniffing drunk before it gets dark out, keep in mind that I am part Irish, and it is my duty to my people.

WEEK 8

Spring break, baby. What happens in (insert your spring break destination), stays in (insert again). Need I say more?

WEEK 7

After coming off a week of spring break debauchery and Easter holiness, we're back in school just in time for April Fools' Day. This week should probably be spent recuperating from the past nine days of freedom, or if you are like me, stressing out about getting a job in May.

WEEK 6

April has reared its ugly head, and if you haven't started applying for jobs, it would be a good time to start. Do I even have a résumé? Is it too late to apply for grad schools?

WEEK 5

Stop stressing about a job. By now, if you don't have a pretty good lead on one, give up in favor of watching our favorite boys of summer play baseball. I hear you can get a pretty decent tan from the bleachers at Tointon Family Stadium.

WEEK 4

Start writing final papers for classes. That Mark Twain essay won't write itself, you know. Why did I feel the need to take two 700-level classes my last semester? It's a good thing I took Geology 100 to even out my stress. What is the difference between a rock and a mineral anyway? Keep the faith my friends, only a month to go.

WEEK 3

Stress from classes, work and job hunting is becoming too much to handle. Skip class in favor of heading out to Pillsbury Crossing for a day of Frisbee and laziness. If only I could find my way out there.

WEEK 2

The decision of "to walk or not to walk" at graduation is finally here. Is it really necessary to put on an oversized muumuu to accept a blank diploma cover in a 100-degree gymnasium on a Saturday morning? I'll probably plunk down $40 for muumuu and shake my head. My parents owe me big time for this.

WEEK 1

Resolve to have no stress during this finals week and opt not to study. Ah, finals, schminals. Who needs good grades this last semester anyway? After all, I always say, D is for diploma.

Students should spend wisely to avoid credit card debt

There is so much to buy and so little time to get it before someone else does. It doesn't matter if there is money in the bank today. It can be paid off tomorrow in amounts as small as $10 a month.

ANNIE LEWIS

Plus, I'm building my credit, and that is very important.

Last Wednesday, the Collegian reported that students are charging up their credit cards more than ever. Some helpful advice was shared such as using a debit card instead of a credit card and not spending more than you have in your checking account.

Two questions were not answered: why do students rack up so much debt, and what would be the consequences of refusing to use a credit card?

The first question is easy to answer. If there is something students want, there is absolutely no logical reason not to swipe and make that coveted object their own.

Tiny payments are much more attractive than saving up for months and paying the whole amount all at once.

One thing always goes wrong with this scenario. Credit card companies are geniuses at packing their pockets with their customer's money.

If the interest doesn't take enough, late fees will rob the spender.

And some companies charge their customers an annual fee. Even if someone doesn't spend a dime on the card, they may still owe money.

Possessing name-brand clothes or the newest video game is not worth the negative consequences extreme charging brings. That answers the second question. Refusing to use a credit card would result in more money in the bank.

An excellent way to stay debt–free is curbing one's spending habits. This is as elementary as looking both ways before crossing the street.

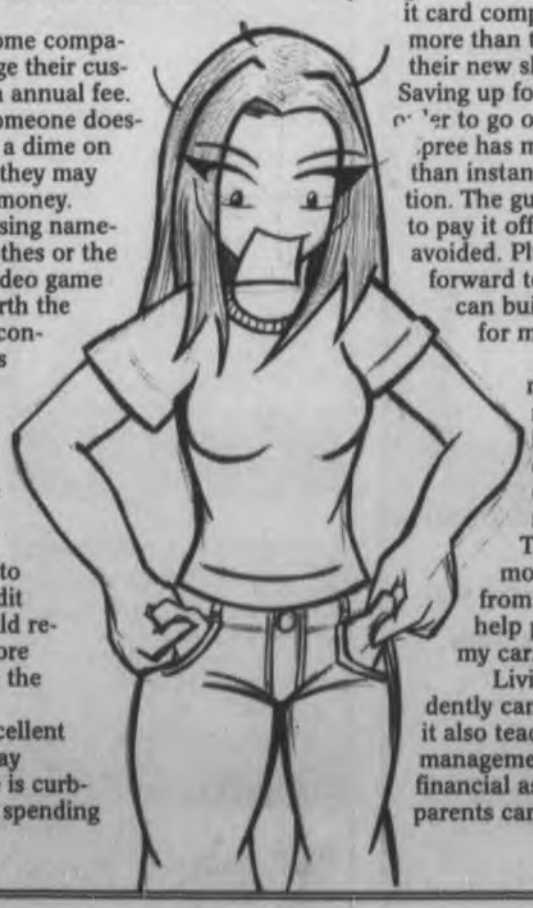
Sure, shopping for clothes, CDs and movies is a great bonding activity for girls. Unfortunately, credit card companies love it more than the girls love their new shoes.

Saving up for months in order to go on a shopping spree has more benefits than instant gratification. The guilt of having to pay it off later is avoided. Plus, looking forward to shopping can build up the fun for months.

I live on my own, almost totally independent of any financial help from my parents. There is $30 a month I get from my dad to help pay for gas in my car.

Living independently can be hard, but it also teaches money management. Receiving financial assistance from parents can be a benefit and a hindrance. It can free up time for students so they can focus on school and build their résumés.

It can be a long-term handicap as well. Spending mommy and daddy's money on shoes and sunglasses will hurt more than help. Learning money management skills now is vitally important, as even marriages become rocky over the issue of money habits. Debt can ruin a life and create unneeded stress.



Another poor choice made by parents and students is the fence-riding technique. Susie is in college and her parents do not help her at all.

Then her car breaks down or she forgets to pay a bill.

Mommy and daddy help her out as soon as her poor management of money gets the best of her.

Having mommy and daddy bail Susie out does not teach her any responsibility. Sometimes learning the hard way teaches the best lessons.

Basically, don't be stupid. Work hard, save money and tear up credit card offers.

Apparently there's an office contest to get into the Fourum, and the winner gets $3, so put me in.

No, don't pick hers. Pick mine. I want the $3.

Hey Josh Witt: party is spelled p-a-r-t-y not p-a-r-o-d-y.

What if after I was turned down for the job, I told the employer, "You know what? Why do you have to rid me of my livelihood, a better life, of my time, of my feeling of self worth? Why?" What would the employer say?

It's snowing and all the sidewalk chalk is gone. How will I know how to vote? I guess I should have paid attention to the issues.

I wonder what percentage of K-State students actually shower in the morning before class, because the guy next to me in macro smells pretty bad.

I am with the K-State NBS. We're in LA. It sucks for you guys, 'cause you're in Manhattan and it's snowing, and we're in LA and it's beautiful.

Aggieville set for weekend of St. Patrick's Day events

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Green beer and Irish folk songs will flow throughout Aggieville this Saturday as area businesses sponsor St. Patrick's Day events.

Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association, said Manhattan's St. Patrick's Day celebration attracts thousands of locals and visitors each year.

"It's just a yearly tradition," Sieben said. "Everyone wears green, and it will be even bigger this year because the students are not on spring break."

The day begins with a Blarney Breakfast at Kite's from 8 to 11 a.m. Brad Klein, general manager at Kite's, said the buffet-style breakfast will consist of biscuits and gravy, french toast, bacon, eggs, sausage and fruit. Prices are to be determined by Friday, he said.

The St. Patrick's Day parade begins at 11 a.m.and ends in City Park, featuring a drummer and piper from the Kansas City St. Andrews Pipes and Drums, as well as community groups and local political candidates.

"The parade was added a few years ago as something to do make the day more fun and attractive to the families," Sieben said.

The main attraction of the day is the 27th annual St. Patrick's Road Race, featuring a two-mile fun run, a 10k road race and a three-mile walk.

Becky Ballard, owner of Ballard's Sporting Goods and organizer of the event, said last year the race attracted more than 850 participants and this year she said she is hoping for 900. So far, more than 600 participants have already registered for this year's race.

"We've been doing this for 27 years, so people make it a tradition," Ballard said. "It's just amazing how many people run it. We've had people run it almost every year."

Sieben said local organizations will sponsor events in Triangle Park for families, including a moonwalk and face painting. Throughout the day, a bagpipe group from Salina will play in the bars during the afternoon and evening.

And of course, many of the bars will open early morning, Sieben said.

"This should be a good year," Sieben said. "Every other year we have rain, and we had it last year, so it should be beautiful this year."

Assistant deans to diversify colleges

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State has made a point to diversify the campus by creating positions for assistant deans for diversity within the various colleges over the course of the past two years.

"This position allows us to focus more on recruiting," Dawne Martin, assistant to the dean for diversity in the College of Business, said. "We have a much better program for the students who are here and an opportunity to recruit students we haven't been able to recruit."

Martin said the positions are also being made to help students from the majority as well as the minority groups.

"What's important for our students from 'majority' groups is that they understand that a lot of this is aimed to help them better learn how to interact in a diverse environment," she said. "We're hoping to not only increase diversity, but create an atmosphere where others can gain a knowledge for when they get into a working environment."

"I think this is a positive trend in this university."
Stephen White
DEAN OF THE COLLEGE OF ARTS AND SCIENCES

Stephen White, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said adding the position to different colleges will have a positive effect at K-State.

"I think the entire institution is committed to promoting diversity," he said. "This is true in respect to the faculty and students. You need senior–level people who have responsibilities and a high impact. I think this is a positive trend in this university."

Juanita McGowan became the assistant dean for diversity in the College of Arts and Sciences late last summer.

"She is someone who has been well–known for diversity throughout K-State for many years," White said. "She's been a role model for many of our students at K-State."

Martin said adding assistant deans for diversity is the second step to create more diversity within the colleges.

"We now have a point person in every college," Martin said. "Our university as a whole needs to put more of an emphasis on this. While the diversity committees were the first step, this is the second step."

Even so, some are not looking to add assistant deans of diversity within their colleges.

"We're a small college and we don't have much funding," said Dennis Law, dean of the College of Architecture, Planning and Design.

Law said they have programs for diverse students.

"We take care of our students of color," he said.

David Griffin Sr. was named the assistant dean for diversity in the College of Education earlier this month and is currently the assistant dean for diversity in the College of Agriculture.

League of Women Voters to sponsor forum addressing rental inspections

By Zachary T. Eckels
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

City Commission and Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 school board candidates will be questioned by the public and local news media this weekend.

The forum is from 3 to 5 p.m. Sunday at Manhattan Fire Department, at the corner of Denison and Kimball avenues.

KMAN-AM 1350 will air the forum live.

The League of Women Voters (LWV) is sponsoring the forum, and other groups are helping as well.

The questions for the candidates will be led by members of the press and followed with questions from the audience.

The audience can turn in questions on cards to avoid duplicate questions, said Karen McCulloh, president of LWV.

There are major issues that both groups of candidates will be facing at the forum said Bob Kruh, director of LWV.

"On the school board, you have the budgeting issues," he said. "In the city, of course, you have the issues of eminent domain, housing and decent wages for the city workers."

An issue that may be brought up that affects students is rental inspections, McCulloh said.

"We'd love to have students come, and if they can't come, we'd love to have them listen," she said.

The LWV also will be passing out information from both sides on the local quarter-cent sales tax issue and on the proposed amendment on gay marriage, McCulloh said. Both questions are appearing on the April 5 ballot.

Since the LWV is a nonpartisan group, they have to get all of their members' support on an issue before taking a side.

"We're against (the amendment) because of our study and discussion on diversity and civil rights," she said.

Wildcats upset Aggies 68-62

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – Jeremiah Massey could not stop smiling, and the several thousand K-State fans who made the trip could not stop cheering – the Wildcats are moving on to round two of the Big 12 Conference Tournament.

Five players scored in double-figures, and the Wildcats erased a four-point halftime deficit as No. 10 seed K-State (17-11) knocked off the No. 7 seed Texas A&M 68-62 on Thursday night at Kemper Arena.

The Wildcats now advance to play a familiar rival, the second seed and No. 9 team in the country, the Kansas Jayhawks, at 6 tonight.

It was the Wildcats' first conference tournament win since 2002, and the victory helped solidify the team's case for a place in the National Invitation Tournament.

"I don't know if it's the biggest win of the year," Coach Jim Wooldridge said, "but it is the most important."

Massey led the Wildcats' second-half charge, scoring 14 of his team-high 18 points after the break. The senior forward was 7-of-13 from the floor and added seven rebounds.

"I felt, me being a senior, I had to do something to help the team win," Massey said. "I demanded the ball."

Despite shaky free throw shooting down the stretch – the Wildcats were 14-of-27 for the game – K-State was able to hold on to victory by clamping down on the defensive end.

In the first half, K-State jumped out to a 19-13 lead at the 12:40 mark on a 3-pointer by Fred Peete.

Then the Wildcat offense came to a screeching halt.

K-State failed to scored again until

Women win after being down by 17

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – No. 3 seed K-State trailed for 38 minutes against No. 2 seed Texas on Thursday night in the semi-final round of the Big 12 Tournament at Municipal Auditorium.

But when the final buzzer went off, the Wildcats were victorious 72-69.

Texas (21-7) jumped to a 17-0 lead to start the game, the most consecutive points scored by a team in the history of the conference tournament.

K-State (22-6) went scoreless for the first six minutes of the game, going 0-9 from the field and turning the ball over six times.

"We came out so good early, everything was clicking," Texas coach Jody Conradt said. "I thought our flow was great. I loved the tempo, and then it was almost like it was too easy for us, and we started to self-destruct."

The Wildcats' first basket came at the 14:18 mark on senior Kendra Wecker's 3-pointer.

The Wildcats then outscored the Longhorns 27-17 to finish the half and pull within seven points.

"It was real positive for us to be able to battle back to seven at half," K-State coach Deb Patterson said.

To start the second half, the teams went back and forth until Texas had a 9-2 run to lead by 15 points with 12 minutes to play.

Led by Twiggy McIntyre's career-high 19 points and Brie Madden's double-double performance of 14 points and 10 rebounds off the bench, the Wildcats outscored the Longhorns 36-18 in the final 12 minutes.

"We did a really good job on Wecker, and if you would have told me we would hold her under 20, I would think we had a really good chance to win," Conradt said.

Senior Megan Mahoney tied the game with 1:40 seconds remaining at 67-67 with a leaning jumper as the shot clock expired. On their next possession, Wecker gave the Wildcats the lead for good with a turnaround jumper at the top of the key.

McIntyre gave the Wildcats a four-point lead with 27 seconds left, knocking in two free throws.

Texas center Tiffany Jackson came back down the floor and scored a layup to cut the K-State lead to two points.

On the ensuing possession, senior Laurie Koehn was fouled and hit 1-of-2 free throws to give the Wildcats a three-point lead.

The Longhorns had a chance to tie the game in the final seconds, but missed on two three-point attempts.

"This team, we have a lot of heart and I don't think we've ever showed that as much as we did this evening," Wecker said.

K-State plays No. 1 seed Baylor at 6 p.m. Saturday. This is the first time the Wildcats have advanced to the championship game since 1997.

"It's a once in a lifetime opportunity for someone to get to that championship game and for this group of seniors that we have, it's our first and last time to get there and we're going to bring everything to the court we have on Saturday," Wecker said.

Sophomore gets career-high 19 points in Big 12 Tourney

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – Sophomore Twiggy McIntyre stands just 5-foot-5, but she was full of big plays Thursday in K-State's 72-69 win over Texas in the Big 12 Conference Tournament at Kansas City's Municipal Auditorium.

With 26 seconds left in the game and the Wildcats up by just two points, McIntyre calmly walked to the free-throw line twice and drained both shots to give K-State a 71-67 lead.

"I didn't let anything rattle us or anything like that and especially at the point guard position," McIntyre said. "I have to maintain my cool as I call the plays and bring the ball up the court."

She wasn't so calm after she hit the free throws.

As her teammates ran to half-court to congratulate her on her free throws, Twiggy put her hands together and flexed for all in attendance to see.

About three and a half minutes earlier, the Sapulpa, Okla., native single-handedly put the No. 3-seeded Wildcats in a position to win the game over the No. 2-seeded Longhorns.

With Texas leading 65-58, McIntyre raced up the floor on a 2-on-2 fast-break, faked out two Texas defenders to clear the lane and made an easy layup, making it a 65-60 Longhorn lead.

Then, just 30 seconds later, McIntyre struck again, this time with a 3-pointer, pulling the Wildcats to within two points at 63-65.

"She knocked down some huge free throws and a couple of big threes, and she was able to get to the rim a couple of times, and that just says a lot about our team and our bench play," senior forward Kendra Wecker said.

Although she did not start the game, McIntyre played 28 minutes off the bench and had a career-high 19 points on 7-of-10 shooting.

Coach Deb Patterson said it was a special night for McIntyre.

"For a player like her to have made this big of an impact, in a game with so much on the line and with so much pressure, is just so extremely impressive," Patterson said.

St. Louis Cardinals should not move wild-throwing pitcher to outfield position

St. Louis Cardinals pitcher Rick Ankiel has decided to give up pitching and try his luck in the outfield.

MATTHEW GIRARD

At first glance, it sounds like a good idea. The guy folded under the pressure of playing in a playoff game and has never recovered, so why not try him at another position?

The reality is that moving Ankiel to the outfield is not a good idea and here's why.

As many know, especially Cardinals fans, Ankiel was a promising rookie pitcher in 2000, but self-destructed in front of everyone's eyes in game two of the National League Division Series against the Atlanta Braves.

With a 6-0 lead, Ankiel uncorked five wild pitches in one inning and ended the 2000 playoffs with nine wild pitches in four total innings of work.

After that, Ankiel has been in and out of the minor leagues with control and injury problems. I'll give him credit for wanting to come back and try to play again, but what makes anyone think he will be a good outfielder?

Like most pitchers, he's an athlete and can probably play any position on the field, and he has proven he can hit.

In the big leagues, Ankiel is 18-of-87 from the plate with two homeruns, and during his 2001 minor-league season, he hit .286 with 10 homeruns and 35 RBIs, but he has missed a lot of the the last few seasons with elbow problems.

My problem isn't with his ability to run down balls in the outfield or even his hitting, it's his throwing.

The poor guy couldn't get the ball across the plate from a little more than 60 feet.

What happens when he has to run down a ball that rolls all the way to the outfield fences?

That could very well be a 350-foot to 400-foot throw to home plate.

My guess is the ball will either end up in the stands, in the dugout or five feet in front of him.

His throws could allow runners to score or advance into scoring position.

I'm not sure the benefits outweigh the risks for the Cardinals, and if I am watching a game where Ankiel is in the outfield, I'm bringing a SWAT team body-shield.

WBB | Wecker named WBCA Player of the Month

On Thursday, K-State senior forward Kendra Wecker was named the Women's Basketball Coaches Association National Player of the Month for February.

Wecker

During the month of February, Wecker averaged 19.9 points, 11.4 rebounds and collected five double-doubles. She also became the second player in Big 12 Conference history to record 2,000 points and 1,000 rebounds in a career. Wecker was named the Big 12 Player of the Week for the week of Feb. 22-27.

Wecker was recently named the Big 12 Conference Player of the Year, and on Feb. 26, she became just the second women's player in school history to have her jersey retired.

NFL | Eagles' Reed injured in freak accident last month

PHILADELPHIA — Eagles safety/kick returner J.R. Reed injured his leg in a freak accident last month and might not be ready for the start of training camp this summer.

Reed

Reed cut the back of his knee while jumping over a fence near his home in Tampa, Fla., and damaged a nerve that affects the use of his lower leg and foot.

Reed had surgery March 1, and his status for camp is uncertain.

Reed, the Eagles' fourth-round draft choice last year, returned 33 kickoffs for a 23.1-yard average. He also saw limited action at safety, recording 17 tackles.

NFL | Saints sign Meier to 2-year contract

NEW ORLEANS — The New Orleans Saints signed free-agent tight end Shad Meier to a two-year deal Thursday.

Meier

Meier, a four-year veteran of the Tennessee Titans, provides depth behind starters Ernie Conwell and Boo Williams.

The 6-foot-4, 255-pound Meier caught a career-high 25 passes for 127 yards and two touchdowns last season while splitting duties with rookie Ben Troupe and Erron Kinney.

MLB | Boston Red Sox begin steroids testing

FORT MYERS, Fla. — At least six Boston Red Sox players were tested Thursday as part of major league baseball's program to curb steroid use.

Team vice president Mike Port said six to 12 players were tested but he was not allowed to give out names. He was contacted Wednesday night by the independent company conducting the tests and told they would be conducted the following day.

He received the list of players Thursday morning and said all cooperated with the testing. Additional Red Sox players will be tested later.

Cycling | Armstrong drops out of Paris-Nice race

CRAPONNE-SUR-ARZON, France — Six-time Tour de France champion Lance Armstrong dropped out of the Paris-Nice race after the third stage with a sore throat.

Armstrong finished 99th in the stage Wednesday and said afterward he wasn't feeling well.

Armstrong will go to his home in Girona, Spain, for treatment.

Affordable decorating

Nadine Green, Manhattan resident looks at a candle Thursday afternoon at Geometrics, 407 Poyntz Ave. Geometrics handles a variety of items including home decorations, gifts and kids' items.

A striped bud vase is one of many items that Geometrics sells. Julie Strecker, the owner of the store, said she has many items that are affordable for college students.

Stores have options for students on budgets

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Although it is not uncommon for college students to decorate apartments with beer cans and liquor bottles, there are other ways to make living spaces individualistic and modern, yet comfortable.

Target has a variety of vibrant colors themes. Mesh trash cans, ottomans and magnetic cube CD holders, all in a matching color scheme of either dark and light blue, green and gray or red, purple, white and yellow are a magnificent way to brighten up even the dullest of rooms. You can also find paper lanterns, sheer window panels and neon rope lights.

Wal-Mart has a huge variety of super cheap decorations and furniture. If you're going for functional and creative, there are floor lamps with built-in magazine racks, photo attachments, trays and motion lamps. To dress up a sofa or chair, chenille throws, pillows (both patterned and plain) and microbead ottomans are available.

For fun themes, sea shells, artificial fruit, vases and potpourri offer many possibilities to spice up the average room. For those who are more crafty than others, trips down the arts and crafts aisle can lead to creative ideas.

Geometrics, located on Poyntz, also has a broad range of decorations to accessorize. Geometrics has picture frames, silk flowers, furniture and candles. According to the Geometrics Web site, the store aims to offer customers affordable, functional, stylish furniture, also mentioning that accessories are an important part of home decor.

Pier 1 Imports has a lot of really classy and chic decorations and fixtures that are affordable. Photo frames, candles and artificial long stem flowers can help freshen up a room, adding a more personal touch.

"By having fake flowers, it saves on having to buy fresh flowers every week," said Pier 1 employee, Becca Duggan.

Also, there are different types and lengths of bamboo bundles. They can serve many purposes; anything from bed posts to curtain rods, or they can even be used as trim. Ilia Leathers, another employee, offered a piece of advice to customers: "Wait for the sales, we have so many."

Geometrics sells a variety of picture frames. The store also has a Web site, www.egeometrics.com for affordable decorating.

M83 album proves electronic music has soul

"Before the Dawn Heals Us"
Album review by Mark Sibilla

Often, electronic music is met with disdain because it is said to lack "soul" due to the methods with which the music is created. However, there are numerous artists and groups that disprove this idea.

Keith Fullerton Whitman, Fennesz, Sigur Ros and Air, along with many others, create rich beautiful soundscapes through synthesizers and computers. Another group that puts the idea of soulless electronica to rest is the duo M83. In 2003, they released "Dead Cities, Red Seas, and Lost Ghosts," a beautifully recognized album that provided perfect music for laying on one's back in the countryside and gazing at the sky.

Since then, the duo of Nicolas Fromageau and Anthony Gonzalez has split. Gonzalez has kept the name and now performs solo, releasing "Before the Dawn Heals Us."

This album is more dark and dramatic than the last, but Gonzalez manages to temper the heavy moments with softer, more introverted songs and small, but significant and beautiful interludes.

The opening song, "Moon Child" is a three part epic. It opens with a soft voice reciting a monologue about raising his arms to the sky. Then a swirl of synthesizers and a swelling of choir voices carry the middle of the song. When the wave dies down, the voice re-enters and finishes the monologue.

"Don't Save Us From the Flames" opens with pounding synths and drums while a voice cries "Tina!" The introduction flows into Gonzalez singing cryptic vocals: "Out of the flames/A piece of brain in my hair/The wheels are melting/A ghost is screaming your name." This then swells into more pounding synths and crying voices. The song is a beautifully dark description of a horrific accident.

Two softer songs follow these grand openers: "In the Cold I'm Standing" and "Farewell/Goodbye." The track "Farewell/Goodbye" is a beautiful melancholy song about love and longing set over a droning organ.

"Fields, Shorelines and Hunters" is a driving guitar rock song that ends with ever-growing static and feedback. This flows into "*," with a swirling synth line that makes the listener feel as if they are floating. This two-song transition is the best moment in the album.

Other album highlights include "Teen Angst," where Gonzalez sings paranoid lyrics about how fast our lights (of life) fade in the grand scheme of the universe. The song is sung over light, almost new-wavy synthesizer lines. "Safe" has lyrics describing the beauty of surviving a "nuclear sunrise." Gonzalez's singing over a dark funeral march-like piano line is reminiscent of Radiohead's "Pyramid Song."

"Car Chase Terror," is an interesting song even though it doesn't always work. Two women have dialogue about someone (perhaps an ex-lover) stalking them. This grows into an increasingly terrorizing synth-rock song that captures the intensity of being chased. Throughout the song the voices are heard crying and talking while being chased by their pursuer. The song verges on melodrama, but is a very clever experiment.

The album ends with the grand, 10-minute epic "Lower Your Eyelids to Die With the Sun." It is the sound of the sun setting and is an excellent album closer.

With fifteen songs and over 60 minutes of music, "Before the Dawn Heals Us" has a lot to digest. At times, it is overly indulgent, but it is never boring. M83 has produced a worthy follow up to their 2003 masterpiece.

CELEB NEWS

12 left on American Idol

Several idol hopefuls were sent packing Wednesday night. Four were voted off, leaving the final 12 contestants in the fourth season of FOX's reality show.

America didn't think Janay Castine, Amanda Avila, Nikko Smith and Travis Tucker had what it takes to be the next American Idol.

New 'Star Wars' might rate PG-13

George Lucas says the newest and final installment of his "Star Wars" films may get a PG-13 rating.

"I don't think I would take a 5- or a 6-year-old to this. It's way too strong," Lucas says of "Star Wars Episode III Revenge of the Sith" on CBS' "60 Minutes," to air Sunday. "My feeling is that it will probably be a PG-13, so it will be the first `Star Wars' that's a PG-13."

"Revenge of the Sith," the third prequel to the original "Star Wars" trilogy, will open May 19. The movie features Anakin Skywalker's transformation to Darth Vader.

Needle-free HIV test gives quicker results

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A rapid-response HIV test, known as OraQuick Advance Rapid HIV Test, gives patients results within 20 minutes.

However, the test has not had much effect in the medical world since it came out two years ago because most general practitioners don't offer it.

According to a study conducted by the American Academy of HIV Medicine, only 5 percent of doctors offer the test to their patients.

Mary Lou Tiano, lab manager for Stonecreek Family Physicians LLP, said the reason OraQuick isn't offered there is because some pharmaceutical retailers in the Midwest, such as those used by Stonecreek, do not carry it yet.

"The Midwest is kind of behind a little bit, it seems, because it's not such a highly populated area," Tiano said.

Tom McClure, operations manager for Physicians Sales and Service, one of the suppliers Stonecreek uses, said the company has previously sold the test, but there was not a high demand.

"We've sold it in the past; it's just never been a quick mover for us," McClure said.

He added that PSS has access to the test, but most physicians don't request it.

Instead of drawing blood, OraQuick uses a sample of saliva to test for HIV. Patients insert into their mouths a plastic cartridge similar to a thermometer, which collects the sample. According to research, the accuracy of rapid tests is 99.6 percent, similar to the accuracy of a blood test.

Rapid testing for sexually transmitted diseases brought an increase in the number of people getting tested at Stonecreek in the past, and Tiano surmised the same would happen with rapid HIV tests.

Kathy Dickey-Wilson, clinic supervisor for the Riley County Health Department, said speed is an advantage of the rapid test, especially for those patients who are worried about their results.

"It takes a lot of nerve to come in and get an HIV test," Dickey-Wilson said, "and then if you have to wait a week to get the results, it can be nerve-wracking."

"It's not invasive testing," Tiano said. "There's no blood drawn, no pain involved; you just let it develop with some saliva."

However, that is only if the results are negative. Carol Kennedy, director of health promotion at Lafene Health Center, said OraQuick was a screening test only, not a confirming test.

"If somebody got a positive test, they would have to go through another test," Kennedy said.

Group wins grant for kids' activities

By Jessica Holland
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nickelodeon recently awarded the K-State Child Development Center a grant as part of its "Let's Just Play" program.

The $6,945 grant was given to K-State earlier this year. The university competed with more than 2,000 other applicants across the country. In the end, Manhattan emerged as one of the 71 applicants that received a grant.

"Let's Just Play," first launched in 2003, is a national program sponsored by Nickelodeon. This long-term campaign encourages children to engage in active, healthy and fun play.

Debra Ring, director of the Child Development Center, said in order to qualify for the grant, Nickelodeon asked that child care centers nationwide have a "Let's Just Play" day in honor of the program's "Worldwide Day of Play."

K-State responded, and the Child Development Center had a day on Oct. 2, allowing it to receive the grant.

The grant's purpose is to provide the resources to create or expand opportunities for physical and healthy play in schools and after-school community-based organizations.

The center watches more than 200 children, but it currently has no playground where they can play.

Grantees could ask for up to $5,000 and up to $2,000 in matching funds. The children at the Child Development Center decided the best way to raise matchable funds was through a cookbook.

The cookbook, compiled of favorite recipes from local teachers, parents and even the children themselves, eventually will be professionally bound and published, then sold through the center.

The cookbook is in progress and is expected to be completed by the end of the semester.

The new developments at the center will incorporate healthy living so the kids can learn why it's important to get outside and exercise.

The playground will be coming in the fall after the children finish their cookbooks so that the center has enough money for Nickelodeon to match.

Ring said the children are very excited about the benefits the grant will bring.

"It's really given them a boost; they're already drawing pictures of their playground and what they want it to look like, and it's given them enthusiasm about their cookbook plans," Ring said.

As an annual continuation of "Let's Just Play," next year the event will be larger. It will take place at the park downtown; the public will be invited.

"It's great for kids to see their parents as role models for being physically active and healthy," Ring said.

Video game tour lets students preview new software

By Ben Spicer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

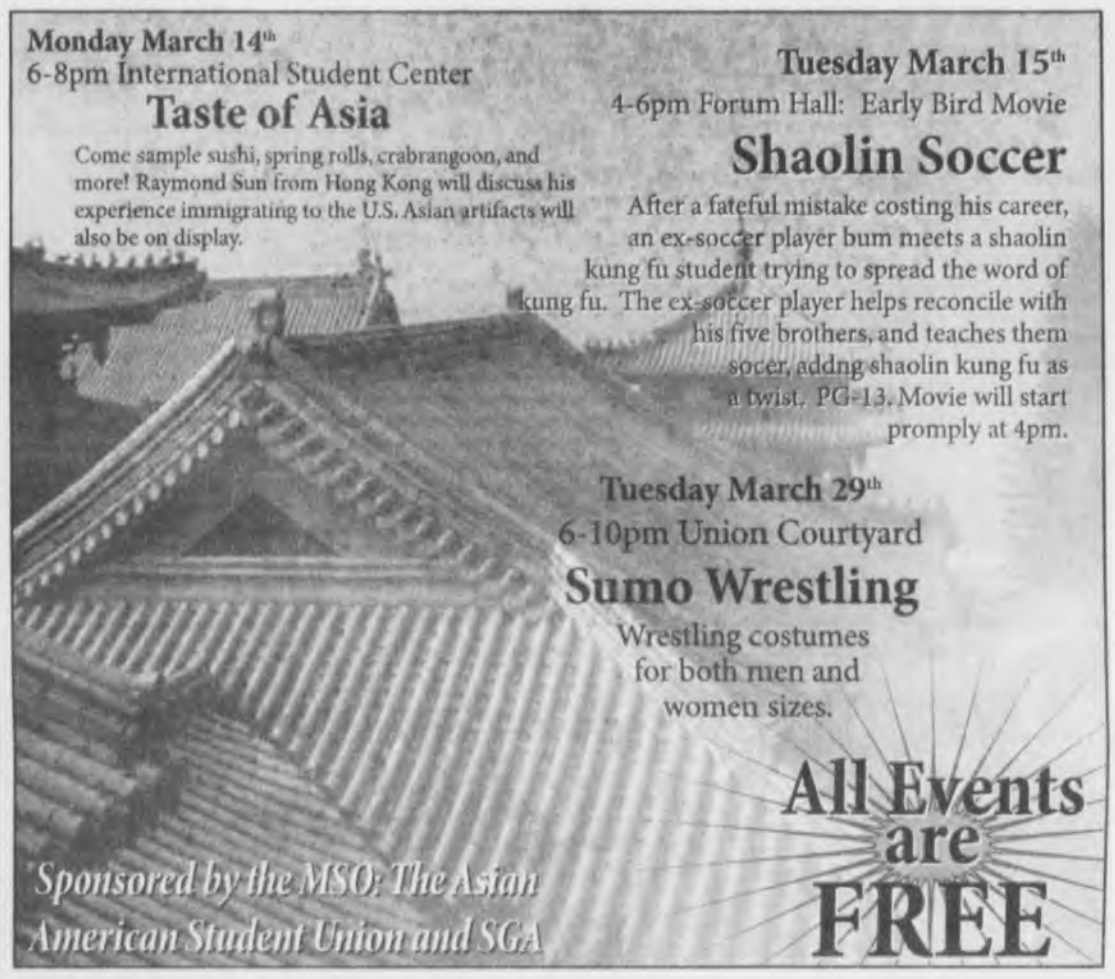
Game Live Events, the premiere video game tour in the country, is bringing its 2005 Xbox Spring College Tour to K-State today.

Sponsored by K-State After Hours, the tour is hitting its third destination on a 25-school road trip.

The event here takes place in the courtyard of the K-State Student Union, and admission is open to the public. Game play during the event is free.

The tour will allow students to preview upcoming video and personal computer games, as well as play many of the most recent releases. More than 20 new games will be presented, including the Electronic Arts release of "MVP Baseball 2005" and EA Sports' "Fight Night Round 2."

LucasArts will be showing the highly anticipated "Star Wars Public Commando" video game, and Ubisoft will have "Tom Clancy's Splinter Cell Chaos Theory" on multiple high-definition screens.



Game Live Events, which is based in Sausalito, Calif., is the most established of the video game touring industry.

Beth Bailey, assistant director of programs for the K-State Student Union, said bringing the event was a worthy task.

"This a tremendous opportunity that provides students with the ability to spend a Friday night playing video games, relaxing and doing something other than go to a bar if they desire," she said.

The Game Live Events tour attempts to provide software companies with important user feedback.

KANSAS | Local headlines make national news

murder. Both events were not only covered by television news outlets CNN, MSNBC, and Fox News, but also were featured on news Web sites and front pages nationwide.

In October, K-State English professor Thomas Murray was charged with the first-degree murder of his ex-wife, Carmin Ross. Murray's trial began Feb. 14 and since then, has been featured on national news programs and outlets.

James Sherow, associate professor of history, said these events do not help Kansas' already-failing image.

"Any time you have a murder case like BTK, it does not do positive things for the state," Sherow said. "The state has an image problem already, so this doesn't help."

Such image problems, Sherow said, include the state's infamous characteristic for being flat.

"You always here about Kansas being flatter than a pancake. It brings about an image that Kansas is a boring place," Sherow said.

The State Board of Education has also made the headlines this year, bringing the controversial topic of evolution to the debate floor.

In 1999, the School Board garnered national attention when it approved standards that removed most references to evolution in Kansas public schools. Now, some members within a review committee want to make changes that would allow students to discuss and investigate all theories related to science.

The committee is investigating the concept of intelligent design, a form of creationism that argues the Earth was created by a series of events caused by some intelligent force. Hearings for evolution and intelligent design are tentatively scheduled for May 5-7 and May 12-14.

And then there's the recently published book, "What's the Matter With Kansas?" by Thomas Frank. In the book, Frank writes about the dysfunction of how conservatives won the heart of Americans and scoffs the state's campaigns against evolution and abortion.

"This is how the rest of the nation perceives Kansas," Sherow said.

As a result, the Kansas Department of Commerce presented the state's new marketing slogan, "Kansas: As big as you think" earlier this year.

The slogan came after months of extensive research and efforts to increase travel and tourism in Kansas, said Ed Gray, senior research analyst in the operations division for the Department of Commerce.

"Before the branding marketing image of the state was helter-skelter," Gray said. "We're trying to take advantage of what a single grouping will do so that people have a more positive image of the state, especially the opportunities in tourism and business that are available this year."

The marketing pitch has seemed to work, Gray said, with the Pacific Research Institute recently ranking Kansas number one in business climate for Fortune magazine.

But despite the pitch, negative news – like BTK and the Thomas Murray trial – does put the state's image in jeopardy.

"For those things, all we can do is express our sincere condolences to those people affected, but at the same time express how proud we are of the law enforcement we have in place to make Kansas a safer place to be," Corcoran-Basso said. "On one level, it's saddening of what's going on in communities across the state, but we do think we have a strong, close-knit community in Kansas."

Sherow agreed, and said such negative events hides Kansas' positives.

"Unfortunately, these kind of things come to highlight a state that is very diverse and beautiful," he said. "People seldom get the notoriety they should – we've had some people with very fine qualities and abilities who call this state their own and remain largely unappreciated."

MURRAY | Trial continues with custody testimony

noted that the neighbor was not aware of the facts of the case and wouldn't have known that the possible use of chemicals in the murder was an issue.

The Douglas County Sheriff's Department also questioned tollbooth employees stationed at the Lecompton exit of the Kansas Turnpike to ascertain if those on duty during the time of the murder recalled seeing Murray or his red Saturn Ion.

Neither of the two on-duty employees recalled Murray. The prosecution said that the turnpike was not the only way into Lawrence and that Highway 40 had no tollbooths.

Judge Robert Fairchild later dismissed a witness testifying about a robbery that occurred in Ross' neighborhood around the time of the murder, citing the evidence as irrelevant and the connection to the case too remote. Other area residents testified as to what they recalled seeing at Ross' home on the day of the murder.

Neighbors reported seeing various vehicles in Ross' driveway in the days leading up to the discovery of her body. Justin Pasley, who drove by Ross' home every day to get to work, said he clearly remembers the type of vehicle in the driveway.

"An '87 to '91 Ford – I assume an F-150 – with a red stripe on the side," Pasley said when asked by the defense what type of vehicle he saw. He did not recall seeing Ross' green Saturn Vue.

Susan Jacobson, a Manhattan lawyer who works primarily in domestic law with an emphasis on child custody cases, testified in regards to the custody mediation that took place between Murray and Ross beginning in August 2003.

Jacobson advised Murray under the assumption that Ross was moving to California and planning to take their then 4-year-old daughter, Ciara, with her.

"He wanted, continued shared custody," Jacobson said. She advised Murray to participate in child-custody mediation so as to avoid taking the matter to court.

If Ross planned to fight to take Ciara with her to California, she would have had a difficult case, Jacobsen said.

According to assistant district attorney Angela Wilson of the Prosecution, Ciara is currently in the custody of her grandparents in Indiana.

The defense plans to call one more witness today – Bob Tressel, a criminologist. Defense attorney Pedro Irigonegaray said he expects closing arguments to begin on Monday.

problem here compared to other areas, since this is a college town."

Addair said his role as prosecutor is to hold those convicted of a minor in possession accountable for their actions and determine what outcome is proper to deter it from happening again.

Boyda said the extra patrolling will not only affect those who get caught but also those who see someone get caught.

"Those seeing someone else getting caught will hopefully think twice before drinking underage," Boyda said. "The main thing is, if people choose to drink underage, they still need to be responsible and ready to face the consequences of their actions."

Elizabeth Bird, sophomore in family and consumer education teacher certification requirements, appeared in court Tuesday for receiving a minor in possession.

Bird opted to apply for diversion, which is a $416 fine as opposed $316, and it will go off her record after three months if she doesn't receive any similar violations.

"If I could do it differently, I would not be stupid and walk down the street with a beer in my hand," Bird said. "I warn other underage drinkers that they [the police] are out there."

ELECTION | Regulation changes to be discussed was disqualified for not turning in an expense report, and therefore unable to obtain a position.

Elections Commissioner David McCandless said he will be suggesting some changes to the elections regulations.

Changes would include switching the timeline to what it was before.

This year's candidates were allowed to post campaign materials on Sunday before the mandatory meetings, and McCandless said this should be moved back to Tuesday after the meetings.

"I think that it's absolutely vital that we make sure people attend an election meeting before they put up campaign materials," he said.

The other change would be moving the expense report due dates back to 4 p.m. Friday. It was 10 a.m. Monday this year.

"It turns out Monday is a bad day to have stuff due, especially 10 a.m.," McCandless said.

It's still unclear when newly election students will take office. Student Body President Hayley Urkevich said it should be in five weeks, rather than the original three weeks.

The Student Governing Association Constitution was changed and is waiting ratification from at least six college councils.

"We're waiting to hear from one of three councils," Urkevich said. "All we need is one more to ratify it."

senior forward Justin Williams hit a jumper with six minutes left to make the game 26-21 Aggies.

Meanwhile, for Texas A&M (19-9), Antoine Wright showed why he was a first-team All-Big 12 selection, scoring 19 points in the first half on 6-of-10 shooting.

Behind Wright and 10 second-chance points on nine offensive rebounds, A&M led 31-27 at the break. But the Wildcats would respond.

Peete held Wright to just nine second-half points, and the Wildcats kept the Aggies to 34.5 percent shooting after the break.

"I basically made it hard for him to get the ball, get his touches and get his shots up," said Peete, who logged his first career double-double with 13 points and 14 rebounds.

Behind the board-work of Peete, K-State out-rebounded A&M 39-35 for the game.

The Cats received a balanced scoring attack, as sophomore guard Lance Harris finished with 13 points, Williams had 12 points and six rebounds and sophomore Cartier Martin scored 10.

One day after avenging a conference-season loss, K-State will try to pay the Jayhawks back for two.

In both contests, the Wildcats stayed with Kansas, only to fall by nine points in Manhattan on Feb. 9 and seven points in Lawrence on March 2.

"We expect the same game," Peete said. "It'll be a hard-nosed fight. (Wayne) Simien and (Aaron) Miles are great players, and we have great players, too."

As for postseason possibilities, Wooldridge said he hoped the win clenched an NIT bid.

"You can't speak for the NIT, but it (the win) proves we're a good basketball team in one of the best leagues in the country," Wooldridge said.

Martin said in a season that has consisted of many close losses, he is happy to play another day.

"I'm just excited to play again tomorrow," Martin said. "This is a great group of guys, and we've been through a lot this season."

47th Fort Riley soldier dies in Iraq

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 47th Fort Riley soldier died Wednesday in Iraq.

Spc. Matthew A. Koch, 23, was killed by an explosive device in Taji, Iraq.

Koch

He was an engineer with Company C, 70th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade, 1st Armored Division. Koch was originally from West Henrietta, N.Y., and had been stationed at Fort Riley since June 2002.

Sam Robinson, assistant media relations officer at Fort Riley, said Koch's death is still under investigation. She said all that is known is that Koch was stepping out of his vehicle, and the bomb went off.

Koch was deployed for the second time to Iraq in January, but had been enlisted in the Army since January 2002.

Robinson said the base has several ways to help families of soldiers who have died.

"Family support is offered, family readiness groups are there to help families and the people who might have known the person,' she said.

There are 4,300 Fort Riley soldiers deployed in Iraq.

Jurors to hear final remarks in Murray trial

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jurors will hear closing arguments today in the murder trial of K-State professor Thomas Murray.

Defense attorneys rested their case Friday morning – ending testimony in the four-week trial with more than 50 witnesses.

Murray is charged with the November 2003 murder of his ex-wife, Carmin Ross, at her home in Lawrence.

On Friday, Robert Tressel, a Georgia-based criminologist with expertise in blood patterns testified about a shoe print found on Ross' bathroom sink.

The defense, led by Pedro Irigonegaray, is trying to prove that more than one person was present in Ross' home at the time of the murder.

Tressel testified that the shoe print looks like that of a tennis shoe, which does not match any of the shoes seized from Murray. He said the print most likely was not made by a fabric object because it would have smeared.

Assistant District Attorney Angela Wilson attempted to discredit Tressel in her questioning.

"You don't have any certification in the area of blood-stain pattern analysis, do you?" Wilson asked.

"No, I do not," he said.

Tressel also testified that tissues found in a trash can in Ross' home had blood stains consistent with a nosebleed.

Murray had said in his statement to police following the murder that detectives might find Ross' blood in his car because she had recently had a nosebleed.

After closing arguments today, jurors will receive instruction from Judge Robert Fairchild and then begin their deliberations.

Diversity in action

TV star stresses importance of diverse leaders

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kwame Jackson was the token Black guy on Donald Trump's "The Apprentice," and he made the most of it.

"There's a one Black guy rule in reality TV," he chuckled.

Jackson, who finished second in the show that made the "You're Fired" phrase famous, now owns his own business, Legacy Holdings, which is now working on a $3.8 billion real estate deal.

"I used 'The Apprentice' as a platform as an entrepreneur," he said. "I've always tried to take advantage of opportunities since I was selling candy on my third-grade bus and in the seventh grade mowing lawns to buy my first Nintendo."

Jackson was in the K-State Student Union Friday as part of the Diversity in Action Conference sponsored by several multicultural groups on campus. Students discussed the need for diversity on campus as well as the business world.

Jackson approaches diversity not from a feel-good perspective but a business sense.

There is a changing face of America, he said, and tailoring business leadership to fit consumer needs is essential to success.

"America is not a democracy, it's a capitalist state," he said. "It was founded upon 'no taxation without representation.' If you figure that into business, you focus on what really matters."

Including minorities in leadership positions means showing from the top that the company values all perspectives.

"We already know we should hire all types of people," he said. "This is not about Affirmative Action. For too many companies, diversity programs mean involuntary sensitivity training or a focus on celebrating and sponsoring multicultural events.

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN
Giving his "Are you down with Diversity?" keynote lecture, Kwame Jackson addresses diversity's in business.

"Diversity in its purest sense means allowing people to be themselves – sharing ideas, taking risk and adding values."

For diversity to work, the chief executives must promote it, and it must be treated like the sales department, Jackson said.

"We must provide the opportunity to train and trust our diverse employees," he said.

From the other side, minorities must meet the challenge of preparation and not take the setbacks as personal, Jackson said.

"Don't hate the system you chose to enter," he said. "Deliver, execute and ask for more."

Opportunity is all that is needed.

"The American Dream is an immigrant who comes to the country with nothing and is given the opportunity and fair chance to succeed," Jackson said.

While K-State is not very diverse, that is no excuse not to succeed, he said.

"Don't put yourself in an early hole," he said. "We can learn to not take things so personally. Universities are all about growing up."

Jackson, who grew up at the University of North Carolina – the first public institution built by slaves – will continue promoting diversity and building up his company.

He's ready for whatever the future brings, but years from now, people will always trace his success back to reality TV.

"They'll say, 'damn, he did all that from a reality show,'" Jackson said.

Workshop forces students out of comfort zone, into diversity

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Diversity in daily life and the workplace were topics of discussion at the Diversity in Action Conference.

Titled "Are you down with diversity?," the conference focused on how students could open themselves up to diversity when presented with it in the real world and how diversity affects people in their jobs.

Thaddeus Murrell, conference chair, said because the K-State population has one predominant ethnicity, students need to be taught how to handle diversity so they are prepared to face it once they leave college.

"I think in this type of environment, something like this is necessary," Murrell said. "We're in the Midwest, and a lot of people are going to be going to places that are different than this."

The conference featured speakers Mohammad Bilal from MTV's "The Real World: San Francisco," Joe Hernandez-Kolski from HBO's "Def Poetry" and a multicultural business panel. NBC's "The Apprentice" star Kwame Jackson was the keynote speaker.

Bilal opened the workshop with his presentation, "12 steps to diversity." Bilal gave students 12 steps they could use to embrace diversity in their daily lives.

The first step Bilal gave was to accept your homogeneity. Bilal used his own word of homogene to describe a person who is comfortable with people and things that are the same as them.

Wildcats gather for tourney watch party; team to begin play in Seattle

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As sophomore guard Claire Coggins bounced from table to table, giving hugs and pretending to interview teammate Brie Madden, the rest of the K-State women's team sat around a large table in the middle of Willie's Sports Bar and Grill, awaiting the announcement of where the Wildcats would be headed in this year's NCAA Tournament.

When the show finally started at 4:15 p.m. – the start was postponed due to the Oklahoma State-Texas Tech Men's Big 12 Championship – the room fell silent, as ESPN began revealing which teams were headed where.

Freshman forward Carolyn McCullough's foot bounced furiously as she waited to hear and see "K-State" on the screen.

"It was so exciting, just being here and to have the atmosphere of all the people here," McCullough said after the show ended. "The commercials beforehand were exciting. As a kid, you grew up watching it, but to actually be a part of it is really fun."

When K-State finally appeared on the screen at around 4:50, cheers erupted from the friends, families, coaches and players in attendance, as it was revealed that the Wildcats (23-7) would be headed to Seattle to take on Bowling Green as the No. 4 seed in the Kansas City Regional.

"I can't wait to go to Seattle," Coggins said. "I've never been, but I hear it's beautiful. It's going to be so fun. I like our matchups. I think it's going to be a very exciting weekend for us."

"I like where we're seeded, I like where we're going," senior forward Kendra Wecker said. "We don't go to anyone's home court this year. We're definitely excited about that."

Wecker was referring to last season, when the No. 2 seed Wildcats had to travel to Minneapolis, Minn., where they eventually played and lost 80-61 to No. 7 seed Minnesota on the Gophers' home floor in the second round.

Kansas missionary shot
A retired state hydrologist who moved to Belize three years ago to become an ordained deacon has been shot to death in the Central American country. Don Kostecki's wife, Netti, of St. Matthew's Catholic Church of Topeka, said he was shot at close range Friday in St. Ignacio.

Syria withdraws troops
Syria has withdrawn nearly a third of its 14,000 troops from Lebanon and the remainder were expected to be gone — as demanded by the Bush administration — before Lebanese parliamentary elections slated to begin next month, officials said Sunday.

Gunman kills 7
The man who fatally shot seven people during a church service before turning the gun on himself was on the verge of losing his job and upset over a sermon he heard two weeks ago, investigators said Sunday. Terry Ratzmann, 44, left no suicide note and gave no explanation.

MOUNT ST. HELENS ERUPTS

Mount St. Helens erupted Tuesday, two months before the 25th anniversary of the massive mountain eruption that killed 57 people on May 18, 1980. The eruption sent a large plume of steam and ash as high as 36,000 feet into the air and was followed by an earthquake of about 2.0 magnitude.

CLINTON BACK IN HOSPITAL

NEW YORK – Former President Clinton underwent surgery Thursday to remove scar tissue and drain fluid that built up after his heart bypass operation last year.

Although the condition was quite uncommon, doctors said they expect Clinton, who is now resting comfortably, to have a full recovery.

RATHER SIGNS OFF

NEW YORK – Dan Rather said goodbye Wednesday after 24 years as "CBS Evening News" anchorman. Rather, who replaced Walter Cronkite in 1981, is the second of network news dynasties to step down recently, following NBC's Tom Brokaw's exit in November. Rather, 73, returns to his full-time reporting roots, working for CBS' "60 Minutes."

SCIENCE MEETINGS SET

After weeks of debate over the controversial topic of evolution, the Kansas State Board of Education planned six days of hearings starting May 5. During the hearings, opposing sides of the topic will be able to testify and cross-examine each other.

The topic includes whether the state's science standards meet the intent of a statement included in the No Child Left Behind Act, which reads, "Where topics are taught that may guarantee controversy (such as biological evolution) the curriculum should help students understand the full range of scientific views that exist."

Burns, Groene prepare for presidency

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's slowly starting to sink in for Michael Burns and Grant Groene.

The two were elected the 2005-2006 student body president and vice president Wednesday night, but amid confusion as to when their term will begin, they are relaxing and recuperating from the campaign.

Burns, senior in agricultural education, and Groene, senior in agronomy, are the first presidential pairing from the College of Agriculture since Jake Worcester, an agriculture economics major, won the presidency in 2000.

"The College of Agriculture has always had strong leadership," Burns said. "Grant and I are both lucky to be in a college that supports us in any endeavor.

Burns is also not a member of the greek system while Groene is a member of Delta Chi fraternity. Worcester was also the last president who was not greek. His vice president, Dana Pracht, however, was a member of Alpha Delta Pi sorority.

"It's going to allow Michael and I to reach out to different sides of campus," Groene said. "Students could relate to one of us. When it all boils down to it, we're all K-Staters."

Burns said both he and Groene understand the importance of the greek system, but that campus and student government involvement is possible for those who are not members.

While bridging the gap between greeks and non-greeks, the pair has established a working timeline for implementing their platform issues.

Online teacher evaluations through the Wildcat Information Network will be ready for next semester, Groene said.

"That'll probably be our easiest issue to tackle," he said.

The contracted tuition rate, which both said will be the most difficult to implement, will take a while longer. By December, a proposal should be in to administration, which will then go to the Kansas Board of Regents in June 2006, Burns said.

"Implementation, if we can make it happen, would be fall 2006 or fall 2007," he said. "The contracted tuition rate is the one thing that will be left to the next student body president and vice president to finish off. We'll have about 90 percent of the work done."

Burns and Groene said they hope the workshops for graduate teaching assistants will begin in spring 2006.

"It's a resource the dean of the grad council is excited about," Groene said.

Burns said the $.055 per credit-hour restructured service fee that encompasses transcript and graduation fees and the use of Career and Employment Services will begin in about a year and a half.

"The whole restructured service fee is going to be a process," he said.

Groene said the timetable for this issue will depend on the amount of support the proposal receives, but that the two have talked with several department deans who like the idea.

Beyond implementing their platform issues, both said the most difficult part of the job will be balancing their work as president and vice president with other parts of their lives.

The two are looking forward to working with all K-State students, putting their issues into action and having fun with the job.

"I want to make a difference here," Groene said.

Election signs still posted after deadline

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Some candidate signs are still up around campus, although the deadline for their removal was 7 p.m. Thursday.

The reasons for not having them down varies from candidate to candidate.

Michael Burns and Grant Groene, who were elected as student body president and vice president March 9, had a few signs up still on Sunday. Burns said he didn't realize he had some signs left around campus.

"We tried to get them all," he said.

With about 500 signs around campus, Burns said he didn't know where all of them were. Burns, Groene and other students helped put up and take down campaign signs.

"It's virtually impossible to remember where every sign is put up," Burns said.

Amanda Lenington, sophomore in pre-journalism who won a College of Arts and Sciences senate seat, said she didn't know when the signs had to be taken down.

"This is my first time campaigning, so I had no idea when we were supposed to take them down," she said.

Lenington campaigned with several other students, so signs were put up together, she said. Their signs were still up Sunday.

Ashley Boldt, junior in nutrition and exercise science who won seats on the College of Human Ecology council and senate, said she also didn't realize all her signs were not taken down.

"I thought I had taken them all down, honestly, on Thursday," she said.

Burns said punishments are appropriate when candidates deliberately don't take signs down.

Elections Commissioner David McCandless said he has been out of town but will be checking to make sure signs are down.

McCandless said all signs should be down by now, and if not, candidates will be written up for a minor violation.

"There's really no excuse five days after they're supposed to be down," he said.

However, there are some exceptions, McCandless said.

"If it's obvious you haven't made much of an effort to get your signs down, it's probably going to be seen as something sanction-worthy," he said.

K-State sponsors open paintball tournament

Josh Gann, junior in computer engineering, protects himself behind a shield during his team's match against the University of Oklahoma in a paintball tournament Saturday afternoon.

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Those entering the intramural fields on Saturday were greeted with a cheering crowd and the sound of splattering paintballs.

About 73 people participated in the K-State Open Paintball Tournament on Saturday.

K-State had three teams competing in the event. Darran Mceuen, coordinator of the tournament, said this is the first time a paintball tournament has taken place on campus.

K-State's purple team placed fourth out of the 13 teams. LeTourneau University, out of Longview, Texas, finished first.

"We had a good response from all of the teams," Mceuen said.

Mceuen said he hoped those who watched the tournament realized that paintball is more than just shooting at each other.

Stacy Johnson, sophomore in biology and pre-medicine, said although she went to watch her boyfriend and friends play for the Peters Recreation Complex, she was impressed with the event.

"I would definitely attend a paintball tournament again because of the high action and the thrill of it," Johnson said.

"We're hoping to do it again in the fall or next spring," he said. "Next time, we're going to advertise more."

Mceuen said they are also in the process of putting together a Big 12 tournament because there were so many Big 12 schools that participated.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

New perspective refreshing in diversity debate

Kwame Jackson of "The Apprentice" proved why different perspectives are needed – not only in the business world but right here at K-State.

Jackson is right when he says we already all know that we need other perspectives in our work, school and personal life. We do know, we just aren't always sure how to approach it.

His new perspective on diversity is refreshing.

Cultural sensitivity programs and heritage months are helpful but often don't have a lasting effect on our lives.

Instead, each of us must embrace the ideas of others and seek out our own diverse education.

Voluntarily pursuing diversity, with the encouragement but never force of our leaders, is what will stick with us when we enter the professional world.

As Jackson said, college is about growing up. We all come to K-State with different experiences and beliefs. Some of us have never eaten lunch with someone of a different race while others have traveled the world.

Some of us know the pain of discrimination and the feeling of walking into a room and being the only one who looks different. Most of us, though, can't even begin to know what it's like to be in the minority.

It's time to grow up.

Celebrate diversity but find ways to make it a reality for life.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Worse than death

Prolonging life often cruel, in extreme cases should be avoided

JONAS HOGG

To me there is great deal of difference between "living" and "being alive."

If "living" consists of the life one possesses, then "being alive" constitutes having a heartbeat, and I personally put a great deal more emphasis on the former than the latter.

Many people believe that if one is not "living," there is scant point in "being alive." Some, like myself, have signed living wills. These documents state specifically that in the event that something should happen to me that should cause me to cease "living," then it would suit me to cease "being alive," as well.

For some odd reason there is substantial controversy about people controlling their own lives. Many times the will of the "living" person has a royal dump taken on it for the sole purpose of keeping that person alive.

Such is the case of one Terri Schiavo. In 1990 she collapsed, and her brain ceased receiving oxygen. She has remained for the last 15 years in a persistent vegetative state – brain dead. Terri has not been "living" for 15 years, and her "being alive" is only due to a tube in her throat that provides her food and various other tubes that remove waste from her body.

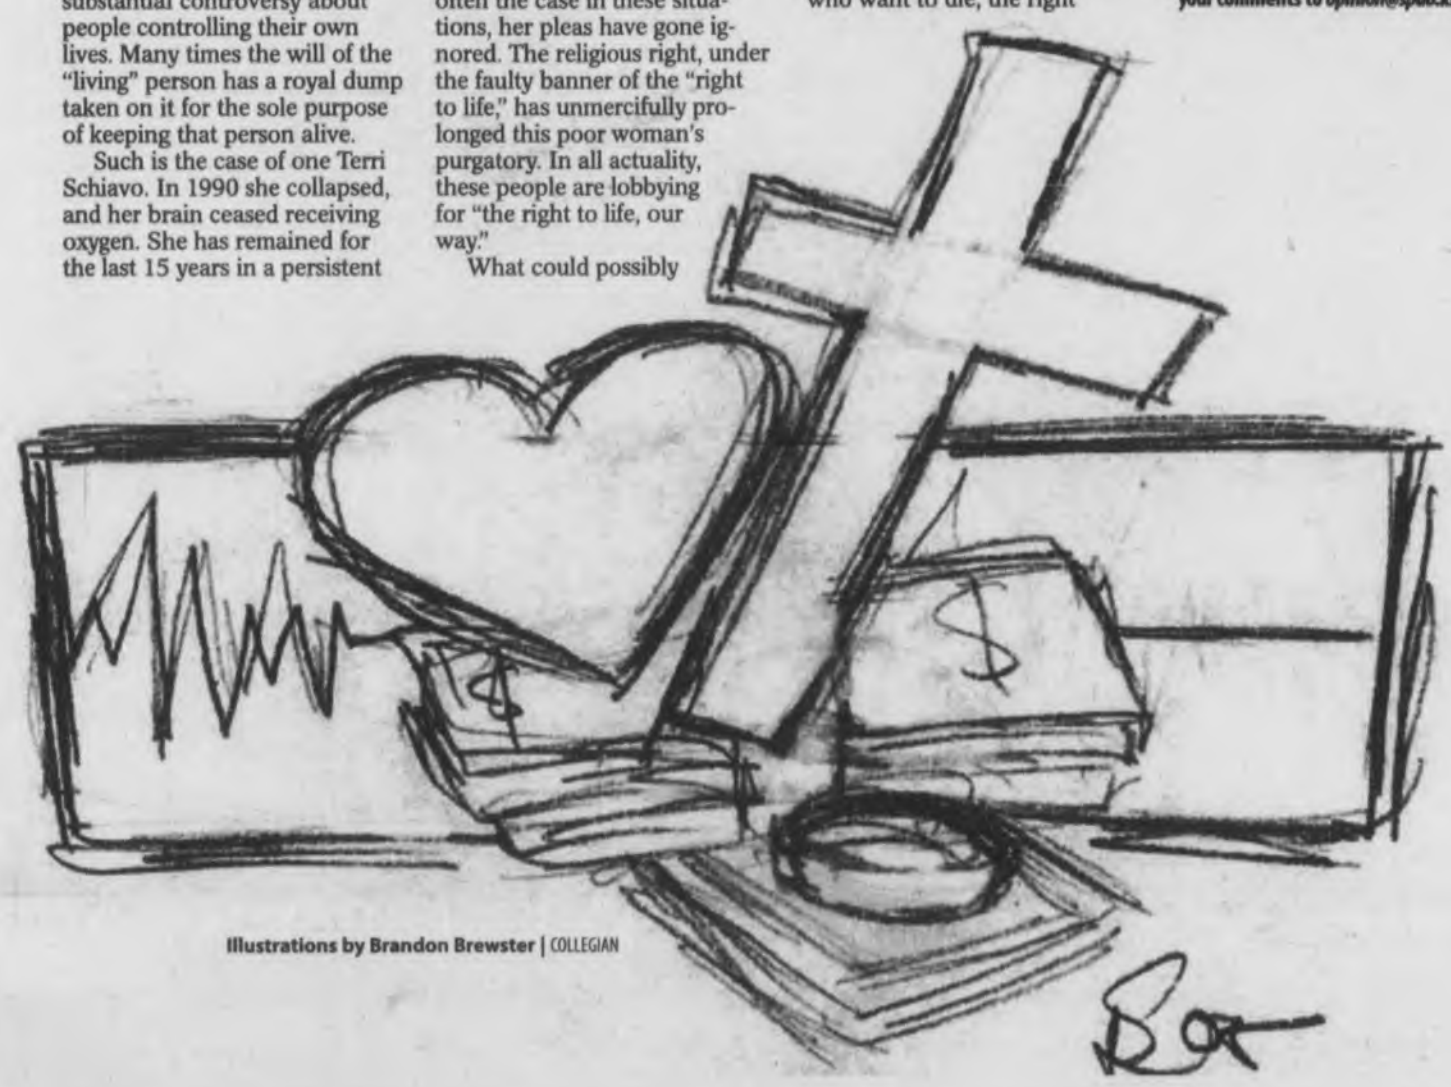
The joys of "being alive," indeed.

Michael Schiavo, her husband (and a cold, heartless bastard), devoted 15 years of his life to taking care of his wife and has recently succeeded in getting her feeding tube removed (again) so that Terri may cease "being alive." Which, unless a whole string of people have perjured themselves, is what Terri wants, as well.

Her husband claims that Terri herself expressed desires not to be kept alive in just such an eventuality. However, as is often the case in these situations, her pleas have gone ignored. The religious right, under the faulty banner of the "right to life," has unmercifully prolonged this poor woman's purgatory. In all actuality, these people are lobbying for "the right to life, our way."

What could possibly motivate this man to seek these actions? He has been sued, received death threats and recently been offered a million-dollar bribe to turn control of Terri over to her wacko parents. Yet, still he persists.

At some point, all rational people must come to the conclusion that the reason he persists is out of love for his wife and for her wishes. After all, if he just wanted to be rid of the responsibility, he could have done so a hundred times by now. Yes, I know he has started another family. How dare he attempt to go on "living."



It's time we ask ourselves honestly: if we would rather see our pets put to sleep than make them suffer, then why, for the love of everything, do we not allow sentient human beings who want to die, the right to die?

But we don't. We refuse to let people choose the terms and conditions of their deaths. We deny them that out of some perverted sense of religion or an awkward sense of love that needs to cling to the wretched, rotting husk of something that was once a human being.

I have been around long enough to know that some things in life are much worse than death. I shudder to think of myself or anyone withering away day by day, a prisoner in their own body.

I realize that someday I will die. I'd just as soon do it on my own terms.

Advising process can be better with students' help

JACI BOYDSTON

Think back to your last advising appointment. Did your adviser:

A) answer all your questions and seem willing to devote as much time as necessary to help you choose the best classes?

B) give a few generic pointers, make sure you had some requirements out of the way and lift your flag?

C) fail to remember your name, briefly glance over the class schedule you were required to make before setting the appointment and shoo you out of the office?

Choice C happens to too many students too much of the time.

This can be a minor annoyance for freshman trying to get their feet wet in their majors, or it can be a gigantic setback for seniors who discover in March they won't be graduating as planned. For would-be graduates, poor advising isn't just something to complain about in e-mails home to Mom. It can be a serious detriment to future plans, prospective employment and financial well-being.

Luckily, there's a solution to this problem. It should have been a bigger issue in last week's elections.

Who knows better than anyone else how to navigate the maze from freshman year to diploma than students nearing the finish line?

By employing upperclassmen as advisers for students in their same majors, many of the pitfalls of poor advising could be avoided.

When you're planning a class schedule, do you make a long list of questions for your adviser, or do you ask friends in your classes for advice?

Ten to one, the advice you get from students who have already taken the classes will be infinitely more valuable than anything your adviser could tell you.

Advisers aren't bad people. Most of them are professors with classes to teach, papers to grade and a million other things on their plates. They're busy, and some see advising as just another demand on their time.

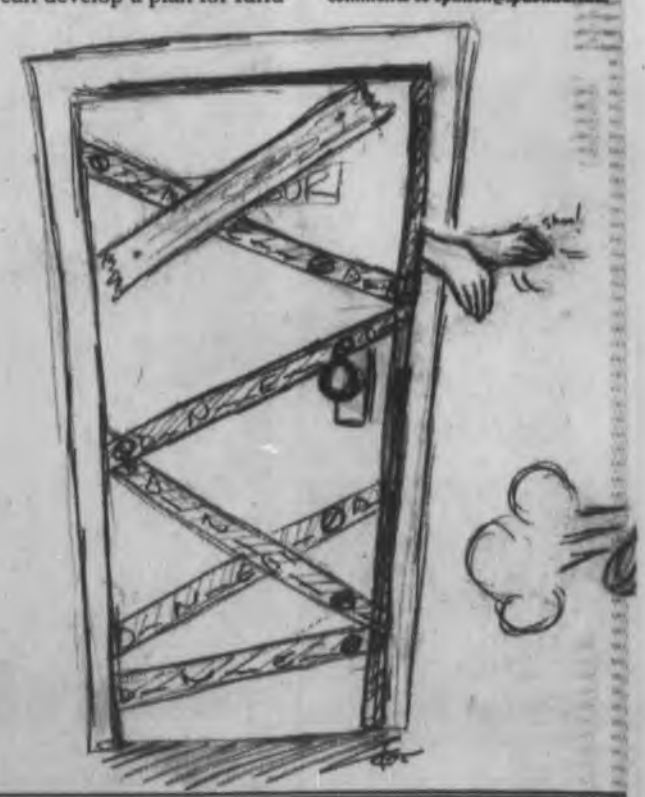
Introducing student advisers would give professors some much needed free time and could improve their teaching by giving them more time to prepare.

Additionally, student advising means more student jobs. Landing an on-campus job is like winning the lottery for busy students, and this system could make jobs available to students in all majors.

More jobs means more money, which means more economic stimulation, which means all kinds of good things for students. Maybe it would even bring more businesses to town (it's kind of a long shot, but, seriously, how can a town this size not have an Olive Garden yet?)

For the benefit of everyone involved, student advising is an option that desperately needs to be explored.

There is one problem. How would a program like this get funded?



That's an excellent question, and with the state of government funding for education, it's a question I can't answer. If I did, I would have spent the last couple of weeks chalking my name all over campus instead of observing everyone else's chalk and wondering how the heck to pronounce "Groene."

Maybe money from our campus privilege fees could get this program off the ground. Maybe we could tap into all those donations from Telefund. Or maybe there's funding going toward the inefficient advising programs currently in place that could be redistributed to accomplish this goal. There's money available; it's just a matter of putting it in the right places.

I'm sure there are intelligent students out there who can develop a plan for funding this program. And if you do, let me know.

Actually, scratch that. Let President-elect Michael Burns know. If this plan is ever to be successful, he and his colleagues have a lot of work to do.

I'll trade your roommate that doesn't take out the trash for my roommate that won't do the dishes.

I find it interesting that President Bush ran three oil companies into the ground, and now he's president, and gas prices are higher than they've ever been.

Chris LeDoux, here's to you. You're a legend in your own time.

How did Delt make it into the basketball playoffs?

Speaking of Delt, when did girls start hanging out over there all the time?

I guess Delt's a lot like FIJI, but they have all their letters on the front of their house.

I just heard that Willie the Wildcat was really bad in the sack.

I love the Delt house, 'cause everyone in it is dear to my heart.

You are my steak. You are my eggs. You are my bacon. Crispy bacon.

So my friend that knows the FIJI who's Willie the Wildcat says he's not that wild in the sack.

I was just calling to see if you guys had any beer, 'cause I need some beer. That's all. Bye.

Me: Name a work by William Shakespeare. My friend: "Shakespeare in Love?"

Yeah, I'm sorry I slept with your boyfriend, but there's no need to trash my whole house like that.

This is to my roommate: would you please stop jacking off so I can get some sleep?

No, no, I kid. Delt's cool.

Tequila ruined my GPA.

Campus organizations spend day in prayer

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A worship event called "Praise, Power and Prayer" aimed to bridge the gap between different campus Christian organizations Saturday night at All Faiths Chapel.

Workers of Wisdom, an interactive Bible study group, presented the event, which began with praise and worship songs and ended with a corporate prayer for K-State, Kansas and the United States.

A WOW praise dance team performed, and there were musical and instrumental selections by students and the United Black Voices gospel choir.

"We had a vision for all this to come together, and we acted by faith and God made it happen," said Jahvelle Rhone, WOW vice president.

Rhone said the goal for the evening was "to have a good time in the Lord."

He said the event would accomplish quite a few things.

"It's going to bring a lot of issues to rest," he said. "It's going to be a different level for K-State. We're going to conquer a lot of different strongholds on a lot of different topics."

Bryon Williams, WOW president, said the service did just that.

"It was great, especially at the end with the prayer," he said. "The prayer just impacted them (the attendees) so much.

"On an individual level, it gave them a sense of hope, a sense of purpose."

Though there weren't as many people as Williams expected, he said he was happy with how the event went.

"It's not all about the numbers," he said. "It's about people's hearts."

There were several reasons behind creating the evening of worship.

"We saw there was a need to bridge the gap with the other ministries on campus so we could be united as one," Williams said.

Rhone cited two Bible verses, Matthew 18:20 and Romans 12:5, that he said were the motivation for presenting "Praise, Power and Prayer."

Sarah Giltner, junior in accounting, said she attended the event because she saw a sign in the K-State Student Union.

"I really like music," she said. "I wanted to see what it was about."

Anne Browning, who usually goes to Navigators on Thursday nights, attended with her sister and said she enjoyed the prayer service.

"At the end, they all got together and prayed, and that was cool," she said.

Workers of Wisdom was established last year during an ice storm when a group of people could not get to church, Williams said.

They met instead for a Bible study on campus and then continued to meet weekly.

The group grew to its present size of 20 to 30 members and became an official campus organization in fall 2004.

Admissions tests add essay section

By Jaci Boydston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In the past two months, both major college admissions tests, the ACT and the SAT, have been amended to include a section testing applicants' written abilities in the form of a timed essay.

The new SAT, which was first administered this Saturday, includes more challenging math and reading comprehension and a mandatory, 25-minute handwritten essay. The ACT began including a 30-minute written essay on the Feb. 12 test date, but that portion of the test is optional.

Despite the testing companies' shift toward placing greater emphasis on written capabilities, many colleges and universities have yet to follow suit. According to a Sept. 7, 2004, press release on the ACT Web site, only 17 percent of the four-year institutions that contacted the ACT planned to require the ACT writing test for fall 2006 applicants.

K-State will not require writing scores for applicants any time soon, Larry Moeder, director of admissions, said. This is mainly because the Kansas Board of Regents dictates the qualified admissions requirements for in-state students.

Moeder said that since 2001, the Board of Regents has set three ways Kansas high school graduates can gain admission to K-State or other Regents schools. Students can either earn at least a 21 on the ACT, graduate in the upper third of their high school class or have at least a 2.0 grade point average in a defined core curriculum.

Kathyrne Mueller, director of academic initiatives for the Regents, said it will not be changing the qualified admissions requirements to reflect written essay scores any time soon.

"It's been mentioned briefly, but it's much too early to tell," Mueller said. "We don't really have any data about those parts of the test yet, so it's not a decision we would be making for several years."

Mueller said the Board would want to determine if the writing scores could provide additional information about applicants that other data couldn't provide before deciding to incorporate it in the admissions process.

Lee Behlman, assistant professor of English, said the scores may be able to provide that information.

"I have heard about the changes in the SAT, and I do think it is a positive development," Behlman said.

The changes in test formats may be a detracting factor for some high school students, said Keith Wetzel, counselor at Washburn Rural High School in Topeka. Wetzel said the number of students signed up to take Saturday's SAT, the first test with the new writing section, at Washburn Rural were down significantly, about 50 to 75 percent lower than for previous dates.

"This is the first experience with including that writing piece, so it could be that maybe those who want or need to take the SAT have already taken it this year so they could get it done before the writing piece was included," Wetzel said. "There were also those kids who wanted not to take the first one but wait a little bit and get some feedback."

Students get free access to new video game releases

By Ben Spicer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Multiple TV sets were in the Union Courtyard Friday night.

K-State After Hours featured a Game Live video game tour in which students had free access to the newest video game releases.

Corey Williamson, a director of Union Program Council and a coordinator of After Hours, helped bring the event to K-State.

"We were really lucky to have this opportunity work out the way it did," he said.

The 2005 Xbox Spring College Tour was making its third stop on a 25 university tour.

Bobby Danelski, of the event, said the tour itself was four years old.

Apart from touring campuses, they also tour malls during the holiday season.

"We've already been to Washington State and California-Berkley, and now we're here in Manhattan," he said. "We come to these schools for the producers of the games and try to introduce new products to their target audience."

Danelski also said the equipment on this tour is being used for the first time.

"Our sponsor list has grown quite large," Danelski said. "We have G4, which is the television channel of video games; we have Game Informer Magazine, as well as the retailer EB Games. It has enabled us to use some very fine equipment to showcase these games."

Randy Gordon, marketing and promotions director of the tour, said he has found free game play tends to bring out the students.

"The video game producers are big winners with a tour like this, but the students walk away with loads of free stuff and a fun time," he said.

"Students get to sample fresh, soon-to-be released or recently released games before spending their money on them."

Cats extend winning streak

By Nathan Ryerson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State baseball added to its winning streak by sweeping the Eastern Michigan Eagles (3-11) this weekend at Tointon Family Stadium, the sixth win in a row for K-State (10-5).

"We played well this weekend and went up against competitive pitchers," Coach Brad Hill said. "It's the kind of pitching we will see in Big 12 play."

K-State started the weekend series on Friday with a 13-4 win over the Eagles.

The win was propelled by the home-run ball off the K-State bats, as juniors Steve Murphy, Joe Roundy and David Baker each hit home runs and combined for eight hits and eight RBI.

Murphy finished 3-for-5 with two runs and three RBI and a fourth home run.

Junior pitcher Chase Mitchell got the win, improving to 3-0 on the season.

On Saturday, the Wildcats played a close game with the Eagles but won 5-4.

The game was tied 4-4 going in to the bottom of the eighth when Roundy hit a two-out single, scoring senior Terry Blunt from third. Roundy also got the game started for the Wildcats with a solo home run in the second inning.

"It was awesome," Roundy said. "This was a big team win out there today. This is a win that helps us build as a team."

Senior pitcher Mitch Walter got the start and gave up four runs on five hits.

Junior B.J. Kissel came in with one out in the eighth and got the win for the Wildcats, while senior Eric Rollins got his second save on the season for the Wildcats for pitching a scoreless ninth. The save for Rollins moved him into a tie for second place all-time at K-State in saves.

"It was a good game, and we came up with key hits at the right time," Hill said. "Some errors and walks hurt us, but we got the win.".

K-State finished up the series sweep on Sunday with a 11-4 victory.

Junior Adam Cowart (4-0) threw 8.1 innings to earn his fourth straight decision on the mound, striking out five, walking none and giving up just two earned runs.

"I had some of my better stuff today," he said. "I was throwing strikes early in the count and getting ahead of the hitters."

In 29.1 innings this season, Cowart has yet to give up a walk.

"Adam had really good stuff for us again today," Hill said. "He shows good composure and consistency on the mound. That's what this team needs going into Big 12 play."

The score was 3-1 going into the seventh when the Wildcats sparked to score eight runs, taking an 11-1 lead.

Sophomore Jared Goedert led the Wildcats offensively by going 3-of-5.

K-State will face North Dakota State at 3 p.m. today at Tointon Family Stadium. The two-game series was scheduled for Tuesday and Wednesday, but was moved up to today and Tuesday.

"This will be four games in a row for us," Hill said. "It's going to be a little different for us."

Cats denied NIT spot

Strong season finish not enough for postseason invitation

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"A lot of guys, once they know they're not going to the NCAA Tournament, they just want to pack up and go home."

Clent Stewart
FRESHMAN POINT GUARD

Coach Jim Wooldridge and his Wildcats hoped they had done enough to get a berth in the National Invitation Tournament.

They hoped winning four of their last six games and beating Texas A&M in the first round of the Big 12 Tournament was enough to extend the season beyond Friday night's 80-67 loss to Kansas in the tournament quarterfinals.

It wasn't.

The Wildcats learned late Sunday they did not receive an NIT bid, extending the team's postseason drought that dates back to the 1998-99 season.

"I am disappointed for our players and coaches with the NIT's decision not to select Kansas State," Wooldridge said in a released statement. "We certainly felt that we earned our way into the tournament. We had been playing our best basketball of the season, winning four of our last six games, with both losses coming to Big 12 co-champion Kansas. We had a successful season. "Unfortunately, the NIT did not select a good team in Kansas State."

K-State (17-12) is only the second team in the Big 12's eight-year history – Baylor was the other in 1996-97 – to fail to make postseason play with an above .500 record and at least six conference wins.

Following K-State's 31st-straight loss to the Jayhawks, Wooldridge said he was optimistic his team had done enough to earn a berth.

"I think we're still growing," Wooldridge said. "We'd love to keep playing basketball this season with this team."

But that will not happen, and now, talk about Wooldridge's future with the team will heat up once again.

Wooldridge said Friday that the postseason would be a building block for a team that started four underclassmen and loses two seniors – Jeremiah Massey and Justin Williams – who saw significant minutes.

"I think it would be very important for a lot of reasons," Wooldridge said. "One is confidence you build from one season to the next. Another is reward for their effort and how they played and how they came together. They are young and they are the staple to our future."

One of those young players is freshman point guard Clent Stewart.

Stewart, who is the first Wildcat to start in every game his freshman season, agreed with Wooldridge.

"A lot of guys, once they know they're not going to the NCAA

Wecker

Wecker is one of 20 players selected form across the nation to participate in the exhibition game, which is the second part of a doubleheader event during the "WBCA Night of All-Stars."

Tennis | K-State drops 2 matches in league play

The K-State women's tennis team lost both road matches over the weekend, falling 4-3 to Oklahoma State on Friday, and 6-1 to No. 43-ranked Oklahoma on Saturday.

Against the Cowgirls, the Wildcats (4-5, 1-2) lost the doubles point for the second consecutive match.

Freshman Tamar Kvaratskhelia continued her amazing play, winning 6-2, 6-4 over Zana Masnic. Other K-State winners were junior Jessica Simosa and freshman Tereza Prochazkova.

Against the Sooners, K-State again lost the doubles point, but the duo of senior Maria Rosenberg and freshman Kvaratskhelia won their first Big 12 doubles match 8-4 over Chelsea Orr and Irina Lykina.

Kvaratskhelia won the only point of the day for the Wildcats, beating Oklahoma's Lykina, 7-5, 7-5, to win her 22nd career singles match, tied for the best in K-State freshman history.

Track & Field | 6 Wildcats earn All-American status

At the 2005 NCAA Indoor Championships in Fayetteville, Ark., this weekend, six K-State athletes earned All-American status. Three seniors and three juniors were named All-America, the most since 2000, when seven Wildcats earned the distinction.

K-State All-Americans were seniors Chaytan Hill (4th-triple jump), Lysaira Roman-Del Valle (4th-800 run) and Darius Draudvila (5th-heptathlon), and juniors Breanna Eveland (3rd-pole vault), Kyle Lancaster (10th-high jump) and Coby Cost (6th-weight throw).

K-State now begins outdoor action this Thursday at the Emporia State Spring Twilight.

MLB | Younger Giambi admits to using steroids

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Former major leaguer Jeremy Giambi admitted he used steroids, The Kansas City Star reported Sunday.

"It's something I did," Giambi told the newspaper. "I apologize. I made a mistake. I moved on. I kind of want it in the past."

Giambi

Giambi, the younger brother of Yankees star Jason Giambi, signed a minor league contract with the Chicago White Sox on Tuesday. While he did not specifically say his brother used steroids, Jeremy Giambi noted a news conference his brother had last month in New York during which he apologized profusely, but did not say why he was apologizing.

"If you don't know what he's apologizing for," Jeremy Giambi said, "you must've been in a coma for two years."

CBB | NCAA Tournament No. 1 seeds announced

INDIANAPOLIS — Top-ranked Illinois heads into the NCAA tournament with one loss and the overall No. 1 seed, while Washington was this year's surprise at the top of the bracket.

Joining the Big 10 champion Illini as No. 1s on Sunday were North Carolina and Duke from the Atlantic Coast Conference and the Huskies of the Pac-10.

Illinois (32-1) was assigned to the Chicago regional. North Carolina (27-4) will be at Syracuse, Duke (25-5) will be in Austin and Washington (27-5) in Albuquerque.

The Huskies, the surprise of the No. 1s considering they were ranked 14th in the latest Associated Press poll, took advantage of Kentucky's loss Sunday in the Southeastern Conference championship game to move onto the top line.

Cats fall behind in championship

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – K-State found itself in a familiar situation on Saturday night in the championship game of the Big 12 Tournament at Municipal Auditorium.

K-State fell behind by double-digits early in the game, only this time, the game didn't end in a win, but in tears.

No. 1 seed Baylor snapped No. 3 seed K-State's six-game winning streak on the way to its first Big 12 Tournament Championship in a 68-55 win.

It was the Bears' first tournament championship, and Baylor became the sixth school in the history of the Big 12 to win the regular season title and tournament in the same year.

Similar to their game on Thursday against Texas, the Wildcats fell behind early, trailing 20-4 less than 10 minutes into the game.

Senior Kendra Wecker's 3-pointer keyed a 15-6 run that pulled K-State to within seven points. The Wildcats went into the half trailing by 11 points.

Wildcats miss Mahoney in loss

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – Senior guard Megan Mahoney was having her best game of the 2005 Women's Big 12 Conference Tournament – until something went painfully wrong.

With 7:33 left in the second half and the No. 3 seed K-State Wildcats trailing the No. 1 seed Baylor Bears by four in the championship game, Mahoney fell to the floor in pain after attempting to chase down a rebound after a missed free throw.

As the 6-foot senior lay on the court with a torn Achilles tendon, the Bears' Chelsea Whitaker took advantage of the out-numbered Wildcats, scoring on a layup and hitting her free throw after being fouled to put Baylor up by seven.

After the layup, Mahoney was helped off the floor and did not return for the Wildcats.

"It was definitely a big momentum play for them," Coach Deb Patterson said. "We had ourselves in a position, prior to that incident, where we were making a run. I thought we had a great deal of momentum, and they go out on a 5-on-4 and score on a three-point play. So, that was a huge, huge play in the overall scope of the game."

Previously, with K-State trailing by 17 with 14:09 left in the second half, Mahoney led the Wildcats on a 13-0 run to bring K-State to within four, 47-43. During that seven-minute span, Mahoney scored eight of the Wildcats' 13 points.

Senior guard Laurie Koehn said after the game that she didn't know the extent of Mahoney's injury, but she was worried.

In her first two games in the tournament, Mahoney averaged 7.5 points and 3.5 assists per game, but in the championship game, the all-tournament team selection scored 17 points on 6-of-9 shooting and had five assists before her injury.

After Mahoney was helped off the court, the Wildcats were outscored 19-12 by the Bears and shot just 4-of-12 from the floor in the final seven minutes of the game.

Senior forward Kendra Wecker said Mahoney was a catalyst for the Wildcats.

"Megan was obviously a difference maker in the game, by her numbers, and when she went out, we still had the game within reasonable reach, but we came down and turned the ball over a couple of times on offense, and they converted on the other end of the floor," Wecker said.

St. Patrick's Day activities brighten up Aggieville

Warm temperatures and good timing brought crowds to city St. Patrick's Day festivities Saturday.

These festivities, which included a parade, an early breakfast and running events, did not fall during spring break as it had in previous years.

The parade, which began in City Park and went down Moro Street in Aggieville, drew a huge crowd. Parade-goers took advantage of the warm temperatures by sitting outside.

Temperatures soared on Saturday into the mid 70s.

Jen Trevino, sophomore in open-option, said the weather was a good reason to go to the parade. This year was Trevino's first year of attending the parade.

"The weather was gorgeous, and it was a good excuse to get outside," Trevino said.

Zachary Lawson, senior in history, has been working at Bluestem Bistro every year during the parade since he began school at K-State.

"I did watch through the window," he said.

Lawson said that Saturday at Bluestem was "the busiest day I can remember."

Diane Meredith, owner of the Dusty Bookshelf, ACME Gifts and Thread, said she likes the parade's atmosphere.

"I like that everyone's in a good mood and it signals the beginning of spring," Meredith said.

Meredith, who has owned the Dusty Bookshelf for 18 years, said the parade is ritual for her.

"I have never missed the parade," Meredith said. "It's tradition."

Meredith said the celebrations are good for getting exposure to her businesses, but she is not sure if she makes more profit.

"It's good," she said. "I don't know that people buy. I think it's good for us because it gets the word out."

The running events took place after the parade. There was a 10K race, a 2-mile fun run and a 5K walk.

This is the 27th year for the St. Patrick's Day road races, said race director Pat Melgares.

Melgares, who works on campus in the Department of Communication, is in his first year as the race director.

In the three races, there were 906 total participants.

Melgares estimates that there were 400 in the 2 mile, 300 in the 10K race and 200 in the 5K walk.

The races, which ended in front of Kite's Bar and Grill, attracted runners of all ages.

Heidi Avalon and her twin sister Heather Generali, who both graduated from K-State in 2000, raced in the 10K two years ago, as well as this year.

"I like the competition, and it's an awesome feeling to be able to run that far," Avalon said.

"I like the chance to run with my sister even though we live so far apart."

Avalon lives in Omaha, Neb., while Generali lives in Manhattan. Both have raced in other races.

"With training, it's good to run to beat your own personal record," Generali said. "And it's fun to run with my sister."

Angela Rokey, junior in electronic journalism, said she entered the race because she likes running.

"I've done the 5K before, never a 10K," Rokey said. "I just like running; it's something fun to do."

Stan Guy, Manhattan resident, ran his first 10K on Saturday. He is training for a 13K in April.

"I just trained for the race on my own," Guy said. "I ran on my treadmill at home."

Local businesses offered specials of traditional Irish meals to go with the festivities.

The Hibachi Hut, 608 N. 12th St., offered corned beef and cabbage for its Saturday special.

Owner Kale Becker, who graduated from K-State in December 2003 with a degree in horticulture and golf course management, said the atmosphere was good for families.

"It's a fun atmosphere to have locals who want to have fun," Becker said. "Aggieville is good at getting community-wide support."

The family-oriented slapstick comedy, featuring the voices of Mel Brooks , Halle Berry, Robin Williams and Ewan McGregor as gleaming, scrappy, misfit robots, generated $36.5 million in sales.

Broadway star Applegate out with broken foot

Christina Applegate, star of the Broadway-bound revival of "Sweet Charity," broke her foot during a performance in Chicago and will be out of the musical through its Boston tryout engagement, which begins Friday.

Applegate is expected to return to the musical by the time it starts preview performances April 4 in New York, John Barlow, a spokesman for the show, said Sunday. The musical is scheduled to open April 21 at the Al Hirschfeld Theatre.

"The entire 'Charity' family wishes Christina a speedy recovery and looks forward to welcoming her back to the company when the show begins performances on Broadway," producer Barry Weissler said in a statement.

Swank to fight fruit fine

Hilary Swank, the Oscar-winning star of "Million Dollar Baby," is going toe-to-toe with New Zealand legal authorities over a $150 fine customs officials slapped on her for bringing fruit into the country, local media reported Sunday.

Swank

Swank, who won a best-actress Academy Award for her role as a boxer in the acclaimed Clint Eastwood-directed movie, was fined 200 New Zealand dollars (U.S. $150) on Jan. 15 for failing to declare an apple and an orange in her luggage when she arrived at Auckland International Airport, The Sunday Star-Times newspaper said in a front-page story.

She has instructed lawyers to appear in the northern city's Manukau District Court next week to contest the fine, the newspaper reported.

Fashion show features K-State designers

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Outfits ranging from evening gowns to tube tops showcased students' talent.

They were featured at the Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers fashion show Saturday.

BOSS collaborated with K-State in to organize the show at Riley Conference Center.

Buckle, Army and Air Force Exchange Service, Dillard's, Gap, Eddie Bauer and Zotcis Attire were just a few of the sponsors also featured in the show.

Nicole Boles, Erica Martin and Liza Dunn were the K-State fashion design students whose designs were on display.

Dunn, senior in apparel marketing and design, said she has always had an interest in fashion.

"I really like the way the fashion makes people feel and look," she said.

Dunn said she will graduate in May and is looking for a job. She said she wants to design children and plus-size fashions.

"I would really like to look at the fashions that aren't always on the runway," she said.

She said her ideal job would be working for Gucci in Paris or London.

Sherry Haar, associate professor of apparel textiles and interior, said she was proud of her students. She works in the instruction and student development aspect of the department.

She said the design students have competed the last few years and won several competitions and about $15,000 in prizes and awards. Haar also has her own scholarship and she enters her designs in competitions.

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

Brooke Schoen and Angela Hasselman, stylists for Janique's Salon and Spa, make final adjustments to Lisa Williams', sophomore in accounting and finance, hair before the fashion show begins. The show featured clothing from stores including Dillard's, the Buckle and Deb, but also featured the original designs of three K-State student designers.

Tony Heiman, senior in apparel marketing and design, was the K-State liaison to the BOSS fashion organization. He said the show was highly stressful, but it was a definite success.

He said the fashion show has been in preparation for about four months, but he was pleased with the turnout.

Open calls were made in order to find models for the show and a modeling agency was in the audience, and some of the models were K-State students. Heiman said the agency was scouting for local talent.

"The show will be back next year," he said. "We are hoping to make it an annual show."

Emily Prothe, junior in apparel marketing and design, said the fashion show was great.

"It had a really fun energy," she said. "I really liked that the show ended with swim wear as a surprise."

Prothe is leaving for London in June as a part of her design education. She said the show gave her even more to look forward to.

"It let me actually picture myself designing and having my own show one day," she said.

Jacky McCluskie, second coordinator of the show, also agreed that the show was a success.

She said more people showed up than were expected, but it was within the capacity. People more than likely knew about the show by word of mouth or the work of BOSS marketing.

"It will be here next year," she said. "It will be even bigger and better."

Students receive many tastes of Asian culture

By Maria Nilges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Free fortune cookies were distributed at the K-State Student Union last week to celebrate Asian Heritage Month.

The Asian American Student Union sponsored the activity and will have more events throughout the month.

The group will present "Taste of Asia" tonight from 6 to 8 p.m. in the International Student Center. There will be free samples of Asian cuisine including sushi, spring rolls, crab rangoon and beef lo mein. Attendees can view authentic Asian clothing and a dragonhead costume.

Tristyn Rutledge, treasurer of the Asian American Student Union, said that everyone is welcome.

"We encourage all students, faculty, staff and the Manhattan community to attend any event of their choice," she said. "After all, AASU puts on the events for everyone to enjoy a night of diversity and fun. We enjoy sharing our stories as well as listening to others' stories. We find many similarities and embrace the differences."

Tonight's "Taste of Asia" features speaker Raymond Sun. He is from Hong Kong and will discuss his experiences immigrating to the United States in 1985. Any questions regarding Kung Fu will be answered as well.

The celebration will conclude with free sumo wrestling at 6 p.m. March 29, in the Union Courtyard. There will be wrestling costumes for both men and women, and safety gear will be provided.

All events are sponsored by the Asian American Student Union. The group was formed in 1991 with a small group of students, led by Jason Ly. It was formed to give the Asian population of K-State a strong voice. The group is most active during Asian Heritage Month.

Rutledge said members of AASU always look forward to Asian Heritage Month in March.

"We work hard to make the events possible," she said. "Many students do not know that AASU exists, so this is a time we get to provide cultural activities that will play a positive role in the academic and social atmosphere of K-State students, faculty, staff and the surrounding community."

Candidates debate election issues

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Candidates for city commissioner and school board spoke at a forum Sunday afternoon at the Manhattan City Fire Department. The League of Women Voters sponsored the event.

Candidates were given 90 seconds to answer each question and give closing statement. Local elections are April 5.

CITY COMMISSION

The candidates for city commissioner are Tom Phillips, Jim Sherow, Jayme Morris-Hardeman, Mark Hatesohl, Brad McCune and Sam Robinson.

Topics addressed in questions included STAR bonds for downtown redevelopment, the role of city commissioner, expansion of utilities east of Blue River, preparation for arrival of additional soldiers in the Ft. Riley area, a quarter-cent sales-tax increase and candidates' main goal if elected mayor.

Hatesohl, incumbent, said he has been in favor of STAR bonds, which are sales tax revenue bonds given by the state.

"The bonds would allow us to do something special to downtown Manhattan that wouldn't otherwise be possible," he said

Sherow is also in favor of STAR Bonds, but he said the northern section of downtown has been able to develop without them.

"Since the plan is in place, I am willing to wait however long it takes. We need to move forward with the developments on the northern section," he said.

McCune said he sees Manhattan as a big business with its citizens as the owners.

"As city commissioner, I would bring in my business experience and take input from the community," McCune said.

Phillips said expanding utilities east of Blue River is not a sound decision at this time.

Robinson said the first step is to see if those already living in the area are willing to fund the utilities.

"Utilities are just one part of the equation. There are other things to take into account, such as economics," Phillips said.

Fort Riley is expecting an influx of soldiers, and candidates were asked how this would effect Manhattan.

"Education, law enforcement, housing, and health care are all important issues to the influx of soldiers. We need to promote what we have in Manhattan to these incoming soldiers," Robinson said.

Phillips said, "A lot has been done for soldiers, but there is still a lot more that can be done."

Morris-Hardeman said she fully supports the tax increase to help the schools.

"We need to do what we can for the schools. It is a fix-it until we can get the state formula fixed. It is the best way to fix the problem now," she said.

Sherow also supports the increase.

"There are precious few financial tools to address school funding problems right now, and the quarter-cent sales-tax increase is one of the tools," Sherow said.

SCHOOL BOARD

The candidates for USD 383 school board are Dan Morin, Peter Paukstelis, Keith Miller, Beth Tatarko and Walt Pesaresi.

Topics addressed in questions included maintaining schools as neighborhood building blocks, decrease in student population, teaching creationism in science classes and the impact of the quarter-cent sales-tax increase.

Miller said neighborhood schools are integral parts of the community.

"Anytime you think about closing a school, you have to look at the impact it is going to have on the larger community," Miller said.

Paukstelis said keeping teachers is more important than keeping schools.

"If it comes down to firing teachers or close the school, I would much rather close the school because teachers are the backbone," Paukstelis said.

Pesaresi, incumbent, said declining enrollment in schools is not just a Manhattan issue.

"Here in Manhattan, demographics are changing. It's not just a school issue. Declining enrollment also involves housing and bringing in families," he said.

Morin said, if elected to the school board, he will offer a perspective that will draw in people from other communities.

Tatarko said she is not interested in bringing in creationism.

"I'm more interested in a science-based curriculum," she said.

Pesaresi said he trusts science teachers and department heads to meet the standards so children receive the best possible science education.

Paukstelis said the quarter-cent sales-tax increase is two-fold.

"Philosophically, the tax would support the school system and reaffirm community support. Fiscally, the money from the tax need to be available so we can keep the teacher-pupil ratio as low as possible," Paukstelis said.

If the sales tax fails to pass, Miller said schools should go after grants aggressively.

"We shouldn't look to the sales-tax increase as the only bail out," he said.

Tatarko said, "whatever decision we make needs to have a long-term focus."

Karen Mayse, vice president of League of Women Voters and Voters Service Committee chair, said the forum went smoothly.

"The attendance shows there is a need for a public forum such as this one," Mayse said.

"The candidates realize this as well since there was a 100-percent turnout rate. We learned a lot about local government and the school board from this forum"

Hilary Esry, homemaker and audience member, also said the event went well.

"Forums such as this one are my primary sources of information prior to any election," she said.

Program gives soldiers community support

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Soldiers will be receiving more community support through a new program.

Patty Newcome, program contact, said the Adopt-a-Soldier program started about a month ago.

The program was started within the family support group for wives and children out of the Kansas National Guard 778 Transportation Company.

Newcome said since the program is still new, those who have sent out letters have yet to receive any correspondence from their soldier.

It takes about 10 days for the soldier to receive a letter or care package overseas. It is another three weeks, longer if the soldier is on missions, before any response is received.

Those interested in becoming a part of the program should submit a form at www.778transportation.com. They will receive confirmation on their soldier within two weeks.

The program prefers no family members or friends of the soldiers, Newcome said.

"The main objective of the program is for soldiers to get community support and give them good pen pals," Newcome said.

Steve Larson, deputy director of public affairs for the Adjutant General Department, said what soldiers want the most is mail, either electronic or through the U.S. Postal Service.

"The soldiers want news of how things are at home. It goes a long way in lifting their spirits. Things that may seem mundane to us mean a lot to them," Larson said.

For security reasons, public affairs cannot give out the addresses of soldiers, Larson said.

Ann Stalheim Smith, retired faculty member of K-State, is a participant of the program.

"I wanted to let a soldier in Iraq know there are people in the United States who care that he is putting his life on the line," Smith said.

Smith said she has been pleased with the organization of the program.

"There was no frustration between the decision of wanting to adopt a soldier and the process of doing so," Smith said.

How to Adopt a Soldier

1. If you have Internet access, go to www.778transportation.com to submit an application.
2. If you do not have Internet access, call Patty Newcome at (785) 271-1562. Application format will be sent in the mail.

THE BOARD of Directors of Student Publications Inc., and the A. Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications at Kansas State University jointly seek applicants for a 12-month, non tenure-track position. The person hired will serve as news adviser to the award-winning campus daily newspaper, the Collegian and the electronic Collegian and teach two classes per semester in the Miller School. The successful applicant will begin June 1, 2005, and will report to the director of the Miller School and to the director of Student Publications Inc. A bachelors degree and professional experience in print media is required. Master's degree and/ or previous experience advising student publications is preferred. Applicants should have demonstrated a commitment to students' rights and responsibilities under the First Amendment and have a strong adherence to journalistic standards as outlined by the Society of Professional Journalist Code of Ethics. Competitive salary is based upon qualifications and experience. Kansas State University and Student Publications Inc., are equal opportunity employers. Review of applications will begin April 1, 2005. Candidates are asked to send a letter of application, contact information for three references and vita or resume to: Selection Committee A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications Kansas State University 105 Kedzie Hall Manhattan, KS 66506-1501. Additional materials including a statement of teaching and publications advising philosophy are welcomed. Please send electronic submissions and inquiries to Pat Hudgins at phudgin@ksu.edu. The Collegian: Student Publications Inc. students have been producing the Collegian for K-State students since 1896. With a press run of 11,000 each weekday morning of fall and spring semesters, the paper is one of the state's largest morning dailies. Funding comes from Student Activity fees and from the student advertising staff that sells more than $500,000 in display advertising each year. The summer Collegian is published Wednesdays in June and July. The Collegian is one of the nation's most honored college newspapers. In Spring 2003 and 2004 the Collegian received a Gold Crown award from the Columbia Scholastic Press Association and in 2002 and 2004 won the Apple Award for best of show at the convention from the College Media Advisers. The Collegian is a frequent recipient of the Pacemaker Award from the College Media Advisers. For more information go to http://www.spub.ksu.edu. Student Publications: Student Publications Inc. is an independent, $1.3 million corporation that publishes the Kansas State Collegian newspaper, the Royal Purple yearbook and the K-State Phone Book. With more than 150 students on its payroll, Student Publications Inc. is one of the university's largest student employers. Five full time staff members assist the director in supporting the student staffs. The School: The K-State journalism and mass communications program is one of the oldest in the nation dating back to 1910. The Miller School has four sequences— advertising, electronic media, journalism (including electronic news), and public relations. The undergraduate program has been rated among the 20 best in the country. The Miller School, which is privately endowed, is the largest academic unit within the College of Arts and Sciences and the largest major on campus with an undergraduate enrollment of about 660. The graduate program offers a M.S. in Mass Communications with an enrollment of 30 students. The Miller School is fully accredited by ACEJMC. The University: Kansas State University, a comprehensive public education and research institution, was founded in 1863 and is one of the first three land grant institutions. It is located in Manhattan, KS, about 120 miles west of Kansas City. The Manhattan campus serves about 21,000 students. Kansas State University ranks first nationally among state universities in its number of Rhodes, Marshall, Truman, Goldwater and Udall scholars. Go to http://www.ksu.edu/ and http://www.k-state.edu/pa/statinfo/factbook. A copy of the university handbook which includes employment and promotion policies and procedures is available at http://www.k-state.edu/academicservices/fhbook/. The City: Manhattan has a permanent population of about 50,000. Located in the beautiful Flint Hills of north central Kansas, Manhattan is the county seat for Riley County and the retail center and medical hub for several counties. The town boasts a quality of life that includes an abundance of parks, an accredited zoo, recreation facilities and arts programs. The school system is considered one of the best in the state. LOSS | K-State loses to Baylor 68-55 in championship

"Tonight they came out and hit their first couple of shots," Wecker said. "We turned the ball over early a couple of times. We just didn't maintain that focus and commitment that we needed on the offensive end. We let them get a couple of offensive rebounds and put-backs and found ourselves in a hole early."

Baylor started the second half the way it started the first, putting the Wildcats into a deeper hole. The Bears outscored the Wildcats 8-2 to start the half, pushing their lead to a game-high 17 points.

K-State made its final run with 13:44 remaining in the game. Senior Megan Mahoney scored eight of the Wildcats' 13-straight points to bring the score to 47-43.

After missing a free throw, Mahoney went after the rebound and injured her left ankle. As she laid on the floor, Baylor's Chelsea Whitaker streaked down the floor for a layup and was fouled by Brie Madden.

K-State was able to cut the lead to three points with less than six minutes to play, but Baylor finished the game on a 14-8 run to ice the game.

Baylor coach Kim Mulkey-Robertson said Baylor was prepared for a K-State run, and it was something she told her players to be ready for.

"We talked about it, 17-0 against Texas and come back and win the basketball game," Mulkey-Robertson said of a potential K-State run. "They score a lot of points in a short period of time. We discussed that in our scouting report and in the timeout when they cut the lead, and I said 'This is what coach was telling you about.'"

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN

K-State's Claire Coggins puts up a shot under the defense of Baylor's Chelsea Whitaker during K-State's 68-55 loss to Baylor in the Big 12 Championship game Saturday in Kansas City, Mo.

K-State coach Deb Patterson said her team did not play a complete game and was not consistent on both ends of the court.

"I thought we were a basketball team that played in small spurts of quality basketball relative to who we're capable of being," Patterson said. "Obviously in a game of this magnitude, that's not enough, and I thought that was the difference. Baylor was consistently good, and we were very sporadic tonight."

The loss was the second for K-State in the Big 12 Tournament final. K-State last reached the final in the inaugural tournament in 1997.

DIVERSITY | Panel discusses workplace diversity

"A homogene to me is somebody who is not only the same or similar, but someone who is uncomfortable with difference," Bilal told the audience. "All of us are homogenes in one way or another. Once we figure out that we are homogenes and accept it, then we can move forward."

Other steps included looking for commonalities instead of differences, learning from and teaching those whose cultures are different and not automatically judging people because they are from a different culture or ethnicity.

The panel discussion had men and women from the business world discussing issues like how diversity is taught in the workplace.

Andre Hughes, owner of the global marketing consulting firm Accenture, said awareness is the key to embracing diversity.

"If there is no awareness, then the lack of awareness creates this challenge with who you are and how are we common," Hughes said. "When there's no awareness, stereotypes and norms prevail."

Learning to think about diversity as an individual and not just as a company is one way to understand it.

Students attending the event said they thought the conference was a good way to present diversity issues to college students. Kyle Krier reiterated Murrell's point that students need to learn more about diversity.

"People need to be a little better informed that everyone isn't the same, but people can still treat everyone the same way," Krier, senior in agricultural business, said.

Shonna Grace, freshman in pre-law, said diversity becomes an issue when people don't realize its value.

"A lot of people don't know the problems of not having diversity, and they don't understand the importance of it," Grace said.

Murrell said he was proud of how well the conference turned out and looks forward to planning the next one.

"We're setting the standard; we're creating a model here," Murrell said. "People are already talking about next year; people are already talking about the future."

WATCH PARTY | Women to begin play in Seattle

This year, if the Wildcats get past Bowling Green, a matchup with either No. 5 seed Vanderbilt or No. 12 seed Montana awaits.

Head coach Deb Patterson said she was pleased with her team's position in this year's bracket.

"As you project that first- and second-round opportunity, you see that you truly are facing an opponent on a true neutral site," Patterson said.

Along with their seeding, it was also revealed the Wildcats will be without the services of senior guard Megan Mahoney. In the Big 12 Tournament Championship Game on Saturday, Mahoney injured her left ankle while going for a rebound, and in the process, blew out her Achilles tendon.

Patterson said Mahoney's collegiate career-ending injury was a very tough loss to swallow.

"It's obviously something that is very, very tragic for her, and it's very difficult for us to see her go through," she said

Should the Wildcats win two games in Seattle, a trip to Kansas City, Mo., would await them.

"Let me just say it would be off the charts, really," Patterson said of a possible return to Kansas City. "The new experiences just keep coming for this senior class and for their teammates, and we're very, very excited, especially when we look down the road and dream about that ultimate achievement of being able to return back here to Kansas City."

NIT | Wildcats won't have post-season opportunity

Tournament, they just want to pack up and go home," Stewart said. "We're a young team aside from Jeremiah and Justin, and that experience would really help us in seasons to come."

It will be an experience that will have to wait.

A win over Kansas quite possibly could have earned K-State a spot in the NIT, but, like the previous two games against the Jayhawks this season, the Wildcats were close but could not get over the hump.

K-State trailed by three points with a little more than six minutes remaining, only to be held off, as the Wildcats shot 27 percent from the field in the second half, while Kansas' Big 12 Player of the Year Wayne Simien had game-highs with 28 points and 14 rebounds.

In defeat, sophomore guard Lance Harris continued to put up big numbers on the perimeter. Harris had a career-high 23 points and hit a career-high seven 3-pointers – the 10th time in 11 games Harris hit double-figures.

Harris said after the Kansas game he had several reasons for why the Wildcats should have made the NIT.

"We fight, we have heart and we compete," Harris said. "We have shown character throughout the year and that's why we should go to the NIT."

The NIT felt otherwise.

Likely making this a more bitter pill for the Wildcats and their fans to swallow is the fact K-State had a 4-1 record against teams making the NIT field.

The Wildcats defeated Denver by four on Nov. 24, beat Missouri twice and split two games with Texas A&M.

K-State students commit time to tutoring Manhattan schoolchildren

By Alex Peak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Tessa Hatfield tutors kindergarten through third graders in math and reading using her own lesson plans.

Hatfield, junior in animal science and industry, said she works up to 18 hours a week working with the children for the America Reads, America Counts program through the Community Service Program at K-State.

The Community Service Program at K-State has created a tutoring plan that allows college students to work with younger students from Riley County.

K-State students from any major can apply to become tutors and can possibly earn a $250 scholarship.

The tutors serve several schools in the Manhattan-Ogden and Riley school districts. Some of the schools include Susan B. Anthony Middle School, Dwight D. Eisenhower Middle School and College Hill Preschool. Tutors have also helped out at the Douglass Center and the Boys & Girls Club.

The tutors mostly meet with students in the evenings or during after school programs, but Laura Harding, CSP tutoring coordinator, said they also can help throughout the day in classrooms where the teachers request it.

"The volunteers pick their schedule, the days and times that work best for them," Harding said.

The program asks that volunteers give at least a one-year commitment and that they work a minimum of three hours each week.

Hatfield said she focuses on reading and math with her students, using lesson plans that she created.

"I mixed math flash cards with bingo.

K-State professor featured on NBC Nightly News

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State professor Fred Brock was featured on the NBC Nightly News Monday evening.

"Retirement: Start Thinking Now," which will air all week on NBC is a series about what people need to think about when beginning retirement planning.

Brock, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications, has written two books on retirement: "Retire on Less Than You Think: The New York Times Guide to Planning Your Financial Future" and "Live Well on Less Than You Think: The New York Times Guide to Achieving You Financial Freedom."

He said the books complement each other. The first is aimed at people who are on the verge of retiring and the other is aimed at people in their 30s, 40s and 50s. The books encourage saving money and tell how to do it.

He said college students always need to watch out for credit cards.

"Credit cards are extremely dangerous for students," Brock said. "The interest is high and there are huge fees if a payment is late. The cards can severely damage your credit later on in life. This will make it extremely difficult to buy a house if you have bad credit."

Brock said he has a lukewarm feeling about President Bush's social security plan of investing in stocks.

"Investing in stocks is not a bad thing, but I am opposed to the individual accounts," he said. "This creates a system of winners and losers, and someone's financial well-being would be contingent on how good of a stock picker you are. I have nothing against the market, but I would not want my social security to depend on that."

He said NBC approached him about retirement mainly because he has a less than conventional outlook on it. The most important aspect of retirement planning is reducing expenses to increase income. He said the myth that he hears most often is that people do not think they have the money to retire.

"If you save $10 a day, then that turns into $50 a week, then to $200 a month and in 30 years you could have saved up to $201,000," he said.

College students need to learn how to save money as soon as they get out of college. He said college loans are a good kind of debt because students are investing the money in themselves. Credit cards are a bad kind of debt. Students need to be aware and have the discipline to save money.

Jury begins deliberating in Murray's murder trial

By Bailey DeReus
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Attorneys presented their closing arguments and jurors began deliberations Monday in the murder trial against Professor Thomas Murray.

Friday concluded the four weeks of testimony from over 50 witnesses in what some are saying is Lawrence's most violent murder case.

Murray is accused of beating and stabbing his ex-wife, Carmin Ross, in November 2003 in her Lawrence home. He is on leave from K-State.

"There is only one thing that explains all the evidence. Thomas Murray killed Carmin," said prosecution attorney Angela Wilson in her closing statements.

Prosecutors said they believe Murray drove to Lawrence from his Manhattan home on the morning of Nov. 13, 2003. They said Murray had time in the three and half hours that his and Ross' daughter was with a babysitter to drive to Lawrence to violently beat and inflict multiple stab wounds to Ross in what prosecutors have called a "crime of passion."

"Rage, passion, anger. He beat her until she stopped moving, then dragged her across the room... He slammed her in the neck 13 times. It was premeditative. It was murder," concluded Wilson in her argument.

Ross and Murray divorced in June 2003 and since that time had been discussing custody of their 4-year-old daughter, Ciara. Prosecutors pointed to this situation as the reason the linguistics professor committed the murder. According to an e-mail from Murray, he felt "backed into a corner like an animal."

Supreme Court overturns juvenile death penalty

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The United States Supreme Court declared the juvenile death penalty unconstitutional in a decision announced last week.

The Court's ruling changed the minimum age of eligibility for capital punishment from 16 to 18.

Ryan Spohn, assistant professor in the department of sociology, anthropology and social work, said he was not surprised by the ruling.

"Given the overall conservative turn in government in general ... the courts, in turn, have been handing down pretty conservative decisions," Spohn said.

The decision was passed down by a narrow 5-4 majority. It arose from the trial of a Missouri man who was sentenced to death at age 17 for the first-degree murder of Shirley Cook in 1993.

The majority opinion, written by Justice Anthony M. Kennedy, stated that society's evolving standards of decency led to the decision. The justices ruled that executing minors constitutes cruel and unusual punishment – prohibited by the Eighth Amendment.

Ron Hodgson of the State of Kansas Public Defenders Office said the ruling will not affect the juvenile murder rate.

"Juveniles don't think things through – they just react," he said.

Dissenting Justices Sandra Day O'Connor and Antonin Scalia have been vocal about their disagreement with the ruling.

"The court's decision today (forbids) the execution of any offender for any crime committed before his 18th birthday, no matter how deliberate, wanton or cruel the offense," O'Connor wrote.

Nationwide, 72 death sentences given to juvenile defendants have been erased. Hodgson said that in the state of Kansas, sentences would revert to life in prison.

No gay marriage ban
A judge ruled Monday that California's ban on gay marriage is unconstitutional — a legal milestone that, if upheld on appeal, would open the way for the state to allow same-sex couples to wed. Judge Richard Kramer likened the ban to laws requiring segregation.

Better warning system
The National Weather Service has new technology this year to issue storm warnings specific to affected areas. Forecasters will now be able to issue a thunderstorm warning for those in one area of a storm, and a tornado warning for another area.

Central African vote
Voters in Central African Republic cast ballots for president in the first poll since rebels seized the capital two years ago and installed their leader. Gen. Francois Bozize is considered the front-runner in a field of 11. His main rival is Andre Kolingba, who ran the country for 12 years .

Relay for Life signup due

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

They're walking to fight for a cure.

The deadline to sign up for the fourth annual K-State Relay for Life is today. Relay for Life is an all-night walk around the Memorial Stadium track to benefit the American Cancer Society.

At least one member from each team will be on the track from 6 p.m. April 29 to 6 a.m. April 30. So far, 25 teams have signed up.

"It's a great way for the community to recognize and show their support for their cause," said Erin Spalding, publicity chair and junior in mass communications. "We want to show cancer survivors that we recognize them."

The continuous walk symbolizes the refusal to stop the fight against cancer and the ongoing search for a cure for the disease.

Sarah Taylor, freshman in pre-health, said this will be her first year to participate in Relay for Life at K-State, but she has walked in the event at home.

"I decided to become involved in Relay for Life because it is a great cause," she said. "I have had several people close to me develop cancer and I feel this is my way of helping them."

Thus far, Taylor's team, Alpha Phi Omega No. 2, has collected more than $320 for the event.

To raise money for Relay for Life, participants sell luminaries to people who know a cancer survivor, have lost a loved one to cancer or who have had cancer themselves. So far, this year's Relay for Life has raised $2,500.

"Every team raises as much money as they can," Spalding said. "We're grateful for anything we can get."

People may also make donations.

Taylor said she hopes students will participate in the event because it is a great cause.

"I think students should become involved in Relay for Life because it is a great way to help so many people and have some fun," she said.

Daniel Matlack, sophomore in architectural engineering, said students should become involved because it helps fight cancer and it's a lot of fun. Matlack has been involved with Relay for Life since high school.

The deadline to sign up for Relay for Life is today.

No-smoking policy not enforced

By Matthew Schlobohm
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Michael Gentile, senior in history and elementary education, takes a smoking break outside of Moore Hall. Moore doesn't allow smoking within 30 feet of the building, unless it is in the area by the benches.

Joslyn Brown
COLLEGIAN

K-State's smoking policy has been in place for more than two years, but a ticket for violating the policy has never been distributed, Capt. Richard Herrman, patrol commander for the K-State Police, said.

The policy took effect on Aug. 15, 2002, and goes along with the state statute requiring smoking to be at least 30 feet away from a building, Herrman said.

Herrman said enforcement of the policy is up to the administration of the building, meaning they must notify the campus police of repeated violations. However, the policy is difficult to enforce because of response time.

"One of the problems is by the time we get the call and we get over there, they are done with their cigarette," he said.

Officers do watch for violators when on patrol, Herrman said.

"If we see violations, we try to break it up," he said. "That's the main thing, we make it quit."

If a fine for violating the policy was given, the charge would be $20.

Charles Krumins, senior in biology and a smoker, said the policy is worthless.

"Why do you have a policy if you don't implement and enforce it?" he said.

According to the K-State Media Relations Web site, the purposes of the policy are to prevent infringements on others and to create and maintain an environment that is in the best interests of the safety, health and well-being of all the users of university property.

Student body president Hayley Urkevich said that while the rights of smokers are being violated, it is warranted.

"It does infringe on smokers," she said. "But I think to some extent what they're doing is harmful to other people, so it's okay to infringe on them."

Some students said that the policy is not stringent enough and more measures should be taken by the student government to address such issues.

"I wouldn't mind if the student government wanted to make more restrictive (smoking) policies," said non-smoker Lindsay Kingman, junior in interior design.

Urkevich said she believes this issue deserves more attention from students and officials alike.

"I think it would be useful to poll students on campus to gather their sentiments surrounding the policy," Urkevich said.

Lou Douglas speaker to discuss values

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students can find out "What Matters Most" from the fourth speaker in the 25th anniversary Lou Douglas Lecture Series.

Jeffrey Hollender, president and corporate responsibility officer of Seventh Generation, will give a lecture titled, "What Matters Most: The Next Generation of Responsible and Values-Based Business Leadership."

Hollender

Hollender's lecture will fall under the international development pillar of the lecture series, which focuses on social justice, human rights, world peace and international development, said Olivia Collins, coordinator for the series.

"We felt this was a lecture and lecturer that could address some important issues in international development," she said.

According to the K-State Media Relations and Marketing Web site, Hollender founded Seventh Generation, a company that produces natural household cleaning products, in 1989 after starting and then selling Network for Learning, a company that promotes adult education. He has written two books, "How to Make the World a Better Place: A Guide for Doing Good" and "What Matters Most: How a Small Group of Pioneers Are Teaching Social Responsibility to Big Business and Why Big Business is Listening."

Collins said Hollender will concentrate on corporate social responsibility and should interest a new group of students with the business aspect.

"He is going to be talking to the people that will be the business leaders, the organization leaders in the very near future," she said.

Students should attend this lecture not only because corporate ethics has been a topic at the forefront of the news lately, but also because Hollender's lecture will directly concern students, especially business students, Collins said.

"His message is directed very much to (students)," she said. "He would have a lot to share for students ... who will be leaders in communities."

Heath Harding, assistant director of leadership studies and programs, said the business world is changing and this lecture will inform students about these changes.

"Corporate social responsibility is growing in its impact on current business practices," he said. "The corporate models are literally changing the way we do business."

TO THE POINT

Officials should enforce rule or eliminate it

The campus policy that determines how far smokers must stand from the building while smoking has been in place for more than two years.

Since the implementation of the 30-foot rule in August 2002, campus police have issued no fines to those who violate this rule.

A greater effort should be made to enforce the policy out of concern for those who choose not to smoke.

Second-hand smoke is potentially dangerous to students and faculty who are exposed to it regularly.

When entering or leaving a building, there is often no way to avoid walking through a cloud of cigarette smoke near the door.

The 30-foot rule was implemented to protect people who don't smoke from the effects of second-hand smoke.

This policy needs to be enforced for the health and well-being of all the non-smokers on campus.

Currently, the building administration is responsible for reporting violations of the 30-foot rule to campus police. Because no fines have ever been given for violations of the rule, a change needs to be made.

If it isn't possible for campus police to enforce the 30-foot rule directly, then the rule should be done away with.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Party attempts to mislead

Republicans newest solution to fix school funding will cost you money

SCOTT SEEL

Every election year, politicians around the nation begin kissing babies and telling voters they care about our children's education.

I'm not a cynical person, but lately I'm having more trouble believing them.

Take a look at the Kansas House of Representatives, a body dominated by taxophobic (I just made up a word, deal with it) conservatives.

The Legislature has depleted the state's budget and refused to accept a principal notion of economics: for the state to have money, it has to receive revenue.

Recently, the Republican-dominated house passed House Bill 2474, an effort to appease the Kansas Supreme Court and fulfill that campaign promise we have to listen to every two years.

This bill seems like a commendable effort toward providing adequate funding for our children's education while maintaining a fair tax burden on the people.

- It increases the amount of money schools receive from the state for each student, though some are concerned that the increase isn't even sufficient to keep pace with inflation.
- It increases funding for at-risk students as well as for bilingual education, though not as much as many would like.
- And most importantly to some, it doesn't increase taxes.

Or does it? Fact: HB 2474 includes no tax increase at the state level.

What the conservative spin doctors fail to mention is that for this bill to work, it's going to involve massive property tax increases in the local school districts.

Some opponents of this bill claim that it could lead to as much as $200 in property tax increases, which they say amounts to the largest one-time property tax increase in the history of the state.

So much for caring about the tax burden of Joe Kansan.

This sort of plan means that school districts that have a lower average property value will have to tax their citizens more to achieve the same amount of revenue than will districts with higher property values.

It seems the Republicans – and I feel comfortable categorizing the proponents of this bill in this manner, as the 78-44 vote in the House went almost exactly down party lines – are ignoring the problem at hand.

The problem is not a lack of money.

There are plenty of school districts in this state which have sufficient resources. The problem is the manner in which education is funded provides for a massive rich/poor gap among school districts, which is created by the very system of property taxes this bill entrenches.

Education funding should come from a state-wide tax base, so that people who didn't have the good fortune of being born in Johnson County are not disproportionately burdened in order to fund their school.

This disparity, come April 12 – the court-imposed deadline for a legislative solution – will no doubt result in those pesky activist judges warlording control of our school system and making our state the laughing stock of the nation once again.

The Kansas Constitution is clear. It is the job of the Legislature to fund education. Anti-tax conservatives in the Kansas House are not really anti-tax.

They seem to be fine with a massive increase in property tax – the least fair method of taxation in my mind – so long as they don't have to accept direct responsibility for it come election time.

Why do they care? In 2006, they can say they passed a bill to increase education funding that did not include tax increases.

Game over.

Unfortunately for local school board members, life isn't that easy.

They're faced with the choice of letting the schools crumble or enforcing increases in the mill levy.

Kansas legislators – the ones who created this mess and whose job it is to fix – should stop playing politics with this issue by passing the buck and actually fulfill their campaign promises so that our children can receive an adequate education.

K-State is only temporary; don't forget where home is

LUCAS MADDY

On our applications, we always list it as a temporary address. In the permanent address box, there is often a street name derived from a backwoods animal and a P.O. box.

K-State is only a temporary home. We can't forget who we are, where we've come from, and how that upbringing – simple or not – has affected our lives.

Spring break's romantic appeal is just days away. While some are off to South Padre Island and others will remain in Manhattan, many will return home.

Home – where we are forever 17, restless and impatient, the stomping grounds of our youth.

A week ago, I went "back where I come from" and found the Saturday of my childhood. No herds of sport bikes coursing the streets, no washer boards in the lawn or kegs on the porch. Just yard work, fence building and shade-tree mechanics.

Stomping the brakes, I returned the sheriff's wave and drove through town. Destination in sight: Maddy Ranch, eight miles out and definitely western Kansas.

Ten minutes later, with the neighbor's steer back in the pasture, I snaked my way through a trio of aged Chevys into the driveway. All the same. Never a change.

After throwing empty juice bottles and old magazines into the already burning trash barrel, it was off to the Cardinal Inn for chicken fried steaks. Kicking up gravel as I strolled across Main Street, I pocketed my keys. No one locks their car here.

Inside, seven separate parties carried on one conversation, no invisible barriers between patrons. I glanced at my impressionable brother of 13 with one eye while longingly gazing at dollar draws with the other.

Back at home, I began to doze off by 10:15 p.m. At 10:30 p.m., I wondered who might be calling so late. An invitation to go to Aggieville had to be declined, and now I was wide awake.

So, just like old times, I borrowed the folks' vehicle and headed to town. One round of dragging Main with country music on AM was enough, so I took the long way out of town and stopped by the only convenience store open after 11p.m.

I pulled in as a carload of teenagers pulled out and headed inside to purchase 32 ounces of delayed boredom. I watched vigilantly as the lone employee – recently paroled, of course – ran my Visa and entered the total. Some things never change.

The night had ended. Everything the same, everything different. Earlier, I asked if "home" could be seen or touched, talked to or visited. But home is a state of mind, one I attained after leaving the convenience store.

What triggered this bit of rural nirvana?

I chanced a glance at the sky and saw the stars. It hit me like grabbing an electric fence. Constellations I'll never know gained foremost importance. I thought about God. The brevity of life and duration of death surged forward in my mind, a montage of memories played in my mind, and I was at home.

K-State is our college, be it far from "home." Hard times are not restricted to the farm and ranch. Students and faculty alike often lose their focus in this cushy little town nestled in the hills.

Next time you return home, leave the ever-changing, hectic scene and find a rock, rooftop or car hood on which to watch the sun set and the stars rise. Somewhere in the sky is our innocence that responsibility stole. Johnson County or Johnson, Kan.; in a BMW or on horseback; Gap or Wranglers. No matter which world we came from, this world is ours.

You might be a Pike if you water down your drinks to have more people like you.

Oh, Fourum. Why do I talk to you when I have no one else to speak to? You are always there for me, more than any girlfriend is ever there for me. I very much appreciate that.

There's always one friend that's always there for you, and that's the Kansas State Collegian Fourum.

It's 6 o'clock, and I'm drinking green beer at the Loo. I think I'm gonna be pooping green for the next three weeks.

The fun thing about it is I'm no part Irish. I'm half-Mexican.

When you're walking home across campus on Saturday morning, you can't help but call the Fourum about the stupid stuff you think up.

Some old guy just tried to bid me up at the Loo. And the fact of the matter is there's seven of my friends behind him.

Youth programs receive grants

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan Community Foundation recently received a $350,000 grant from the Kansas Health Foundation.

Michelle Robben, executive director of the Manhattan Community Foundation, said the grant was based on the success of the foundation in 2004.

Jim Morrison, board president of the Manhattan Community Foundation, said the foundation was successful because it does what the people want.

"We are designed in improving the quality and enhancement of the community," Morrison said. "The foundation is a vehicle for people to accomplish charitable things."

Robben said the grant will be placed in the endowed youth fund, which means it can only go toward youth-related projects. Because it is endowed, the foundation can only spend the earnings made on it.

In addition to this grant, Robben said the Kansas Health Foundation is offering the Challenge grant over the next two years.

The Challenge grant will match any additional funds brought in by Manhattan Community Foundation by 50 percent.

Robben said grants such as this one are important because of the size of the community and limited funds.

"Any time funds are available for children, they can only support and benefit them," she said.

"The great thing about this grant is the opportunity to make an impact in a child's life."

Students get a taste of Asia

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The smell of fresh crab rangoon and steaming fried rice greeted the attendees of the Asian American Student Union "Tastes of Asia" event Monday night.

More than 100 students, faculty members and local residents attended the event, which allowed participants the chance to experience different aspects of Asian culture.

Several different Asian dishes were served to those in attendance, including crab rangoon, beef lo mein, spring rolls and several styles of sushi. The food was donated by Raymond Sun, who then gave a presentation about the transition from living in Asia to surviving in Kansas.

Sun was born and raised in Hong Kong and moved to the United States in 1985. Upon arriving in the United States, Sun decided to try his hand in the food industry.

"My dream was opening up a restaurant," Sun said.

In the United States, he started and ran several different restaurants serving Asian food. He owned restaurants in other cities, and now owns two restaurants in Topeka.

Sun said the hardest part of running an Asian restaurant in the United States is realizing that Americans don't like the same types of food as Asians and trying to find what it is that Americans like.

After he said his introduction, Sun answered questions, ranging from whether he had experienced discrimination while in Kansas to whether all sushi has raw fish in it.

"It was interesting," Brad Taylor, senior in electrical engineering, said. "I didn't know that not all sushi has fish in it."

Along with Sun, Katie Pasternack, senior in elementary education, was present to answer questions people had about Kung Fu. Pasternack has been studying Kung Fu for about a year, and has learned from classes through UFM.

The event was organized by the Asian American Student Union, which was started in 1991.

Kyle Walters, AASU president and junior in music education, said that AASU is a good place for students interested in Asian culture "to just hang out."

AASU is open to any member of the Manhattan community who is interested in Asian culture and wishes to further the community's knowledge of Asian civilization.

"We are here to give the Asian population a voice," Tristyn Rutledge, AASU treasurer and senior in marketing, said.

The "Tastes of Asia" event is part of a series of events being held by the AASU in recognition of Asian Heritage Month. Other events this week include the showing of the movie "Shaolin Soccer" from 4-6 p.m. today in the K-State Student Union Forum Hall and Sumo wrestling from 6-10 p.m. March 29 in Bosco Student Plaza.

Katherine Hwang, 8, eats food from Sun's Chinese Restaurant as her mother, Grace Hwang, adviser to the Asian American Student Union, listens to the question and answer session with Raymond Sun at the annual Taste of Asia event.

Manhattan water treatment to add chloramine

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan is in the process of changing its water.

"We are changing the disinfection method of water. Right now we use chlorine," said Jerry McIntyre, deputy director of public works.

The new water will continue to use chlorine with the addition of ammonia. The reason for the change is to improve overall water quality and meet stringent water regulations.

"Chloramine is a more stable disinfectant than just plain chlorine," McIntyre said.

He said ammonia is used as a disinfectant in low doses in distribution systems. Ammonia is approved by Kansas Department of Health and the Environmental Protection Agency.

Chloramine is harmful in water for kidney dialysis patients and fish aquariums. Businesses that have highly treated water should also remove chloramine from their drinking water.

Alexander Mathews, professor of civil engineering, said those facing harm from chloramine need to filter their water before drinking it.

"This can be done through activated carbon filters, which are readily available at aquarium supply centers," he said.

There will not be much difference as far as taste goes. If anything, chloramine will have less of a chlorine taste, he said.

The cost of the project is around $1.1 million.

All customers who currently receive city water services will be affected by the change.

The switch to chloramine is scheduled for late April or early May.

"We plan on notifying our customers through the mail with information in their next billing statement and through the media," McIntyre said.

In 1979, standards for byproducts were passed in Kansas. Chloramine has been in use since the early 1980s, said Dave Waldo, head of public water supply for Kansas Department of Health and Environment.

"The main advantage to chloramine is it has a longer life and is more stable. It won't be an age issue in larger districts such as Manhattan," Waldo said.

Chloramine

- Chloramine is not harmful to everyday drinking water. Chloramine should be removed from water in the following circumstances:
  - — kidney dialysis patients
  - — aquarium water for fishes
  - — businesses that use treated water

New trade policies to prevent mad cow progression

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Threats posed by the trading and transporting of goods across U.S. borders is the focus of a study by Justin Kastner.

Kastner, assistant professor in food safety and security, is working in conjunction with Jason Ackleson, assistant professor of government at New Mexico State University, to study the threats posed by extensive trading and transporting of various imports across borders. Kastner and Ackleson will research terrorists' abilities to cross borders as well.

"Since the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks, the U.S. has introduced a series of new border policies," Kastner said.

Canada is the United States' number one trading partner with an estimated $400 billion in trade each year, Ackleson said.

The most recent issue hindering trade efforts between the United States and Canada is Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy (BSE) or Mad Cow Disease, which has been connected to a new variant called Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease, a severe, degenerative neurological disease affecting humans.

This disease has been linked to 149 cases in the United Kingdom, Kastner said. With this threat, the United States and Canada are trying to maintain a healthy, BSE-free food supply.

Live cattle trade was supposed to resume on March 7, but a U.S. District Court recently ruled against reinstating such trade practices, Kastner said.

Kastner and Ackleson plan to make trips to the U.S.-Canadian border throughout 2005. Their study will focus largely on "Smart Border" technologies.

"Smart Border technologies are border-related systems and tools intended to facilitate the secure, efficient and safe movement of goods, people and commodities," Kastner said.

Kastner and Ackleson said they will complete their study and present their findings to government officials who should consider that information when developing future trade policies and potential security plans, Ackleson said.

NIT rejection difficult to understand

MICHAEL ASHFORD

I thought things were changing.

I really thought the K-State men's basketball team was going to catch a break this season and finally be rewarded for all the hard work put into this season.

Surely, I thought, after posting a 17-12 record, finishing the season as winners of four of their last six and knocking off NCAA Tournament "bubble team" Texas A&M in the first round of the Big 12 Tournament, the Wildcats would receive a bid to the National Invitational Tournament.

Then the reality of being a follower of K-State basketball set in late Sunday night, when it was announced K-State would be staying home during the postseason – again.

There would be no NIT bid this year.

Let me just say that this is one extremely upsetting turn of events.

Not only was K-State a much-improved team this season and more deserving of an NIT bid than any of the previous six Wildcat teams, but some of the teams chosen in place of the Wildcats make me want to ask one question: What the hell?

I would love to have an NIT representative explain to me how teams such as Denver, San Francisco, Rice or Hofstra made it in, while K-State, who plays in the Big 12 – a real league – gets left by the wayside.

Do the folks with the NIT really believe those teams would be a better draw than K-State?

The answer is simple – no.

K-State was competitive in all but a couple games this season, which could make for some exciting tournament games.

Adding to the Wildcats' appeal is the fact that home attendance increased this season. Overall attendance was at its highest since 1999-2000, as the Wildcats drew 7,510 fans per game. However, a more telling number is the Wildcats' conference attendance averages. K-State drew an average of 9,641 per game, including five games over the 10,000 mark.

Call me crazy, but I highly doubt San Francisco or Denver can make that claim.

Had K-State been blessed with a home game or a close-to-home road game in the NIT, I 100-percent guarantee you would see more tickets sold than Denver, San Francisco, Rice or Hofstra would sell.

Nothing anyone could say will convince me otherwise.

Another interesting statistic is that K-State played three teams who made it into the NIT, and had a combined 4-1 record against them. K-State swept two games against Missouri – a team that has a measly 16-16 record – beat Denver and split two games with Texas A&M.

I know K-State isn't exactly the powerhouse basketball school it once was, but the fact still remains that K-State was more deserving of a bid for the NIT than some of the other teams selected.

Before the Big 12 Tournament game against Texas A&M, K-State fans were told that a win over the Aggies would go a long ways towards securing an NIT bid.

What happened here, NIT people? Last time I checked, we won that game.

It is a joke that K-State was not selected to play in the NIT.

I feel badly for guys like seniors Jeremiah Massey and Justin Williams, who played their guts out this season in hopes of taking K-State a step or two further down the path of K-State basketball resurrection.

Sadly, those guys will have to leave K-State without the reward they deserved, all because the NIT selection committee felt teams such as the barely-.500 Missouri Tigers or the mighty Denver Pioneers were more deserving.

Thanks for nothing, NIT. I hope you feel good about screwing over the players and fans here at K-State.

Wildcats drop 2 on the road in Oklahoma

Tamar Kvaratskhelia tied the single-season freshman win record with her 22nd singles win against Oklahoma.

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The road hasn't been easy for the K-State women's tennis team.

The Wildcats' three-game winning streak was snapped this weekend with two straight losses in Oklahoma. K-State lost a heartbreaker to Oklahoma State 4-3 on Friday, followed by a 6-1 loss at the hands of the Oklahoma Sooners on Saturday.

The two losses drop the Wildcats to 0-4 on the road this year.

K-State also continued to struggle on the doubles end, dropping its second and third straight doubles points this season.

Head coach Steve Bietau said the weekend was a disappointing setback for his squad.

"Both of the matches were disappointing this weekend," Bietau said. "The matches were separate, but the same in some ways. We beat ourselves in Stillwater against OSU. The OU match was different in that they were a stronger team and outplayed us, but the match on Friday set a bad tone for the Athletes receive All-America status

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's track and field team concluded its indoor season on a positive note at the NCAA Indoor Championships Friday and Saturday in Fayetteville, Ark.

Seven Wildcats received NCAA All-America status for their performances, the most by a Wildcat squad since the women's team alone produced seven All-Americans in 2000. The four men's All-America performers are the most since 1989.

The K-State women placed 14th (15.5 points), and the Wildcat men tied for 28th (7 points) at the national meet. In 2004, both teams finished 16th nationally.

K-State head coach Cliff Rovelto, whose teams have placed in the top 25 at indoor championships 10 times in 26 appearances, said he was generally pleased with his athletes' performances, but his team could have placed higher in a couple of events.

"Overall, (our performance) was pretty good," Rovelto said. "Nine kids went and seven ended up being All-Americans, and that is getting tougher and tougher to do each year.

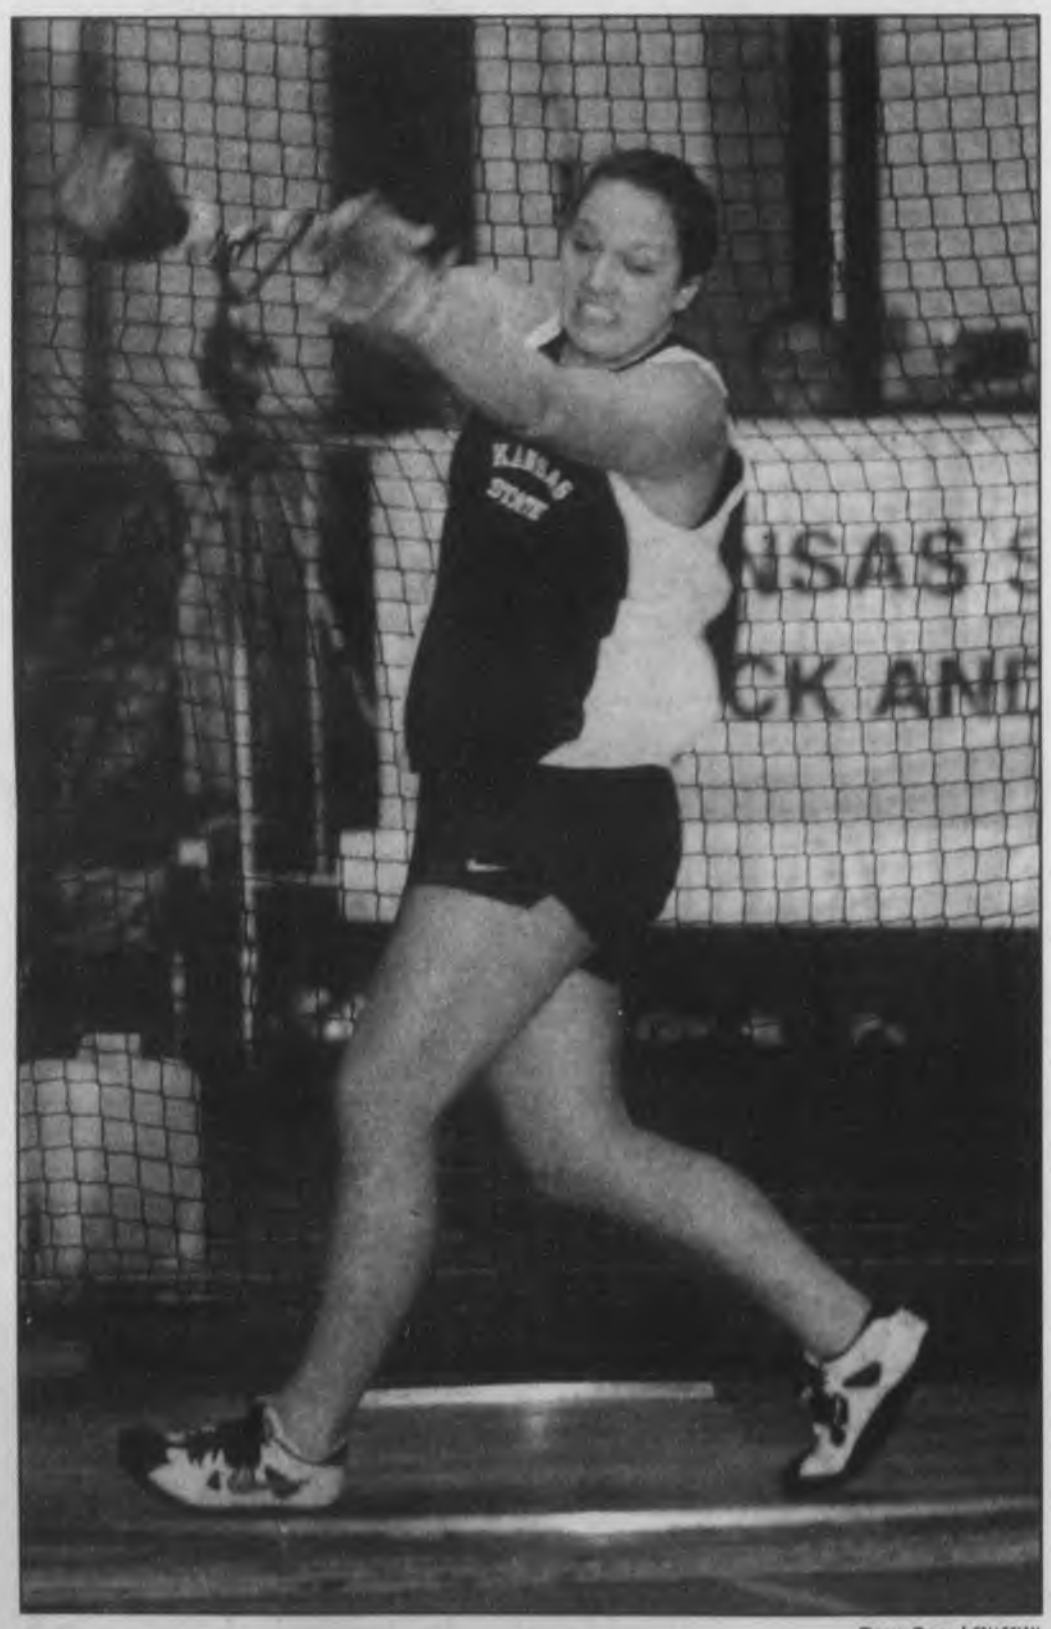
"I think that everybody went into the meet ready and physically prepared, but obviously we made some mistakes in competition and so forth, and that cost us."

Three Wildcat women placed in the top four in their respective events, led by junior Breanna Eveland's tie for third place in the pole vault. Senior triple jumper Chaytan Hill and senior middle distance runner Lysaira Roman-Del Valle each captured fourth place in their respective events.

Eveland's vault of 13-09 1/4 tied her school record, which she set at the KSU-KU-MU Triangular earlier this season.

Hill, from Kirby, Texas, finished second at the 2004 NCAA Indoor Championships, and received All-America honors for a second consecutive year.

Roman-Del Valle, a native of San Lorenzo, Puerto Rico, competed in her first national competition in the 800-meter run and set a school record with a time of 2 minutes, 5.52 seconds.



Roman-Del Valle said she was happy to just qualify for Performance at Longhorn Invitational below expectations

By Ben Fallin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's golf team went into the second round of the Betsy Rawls Longhorn Invitational in a good place for a high finish. The Wildcats left on Sunday disappointed, finishing in 14th place with an overall score of 972.

K-State was in ninth place after one round of golf in Austin, Texas. The Wildcats' play in the second round dropped them into 15th place. Head coach Kristi Knight believes the weather had a negative effect on her team.

"It's good and bad. It's been a bitter pill to swallow," Knight said in reference to her team's up-and-down performance so far this season. "The wind really picked up on Saturday. It wasn't a good putting tournament for us."

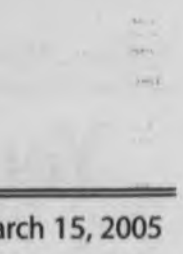
One bright spot in a rather gloomy invitational for K-State was the play of sophomore Helene Robert. The Lac Brome, Quebec, native had a rough first two rounds, but finished strong, shooting a 2-over 74 on Sunday to improve from 47th to 28th.

Robert led the Wildcats with a three round score of 235. Freshman Kali Quick and senior Sarah Heffel both shot 245 to finish in a tie for 59th. Heffel's younger sister, Katy, finished two strokes behind Sarah Heffel to end in a tie for 66th. Garden City, Kan., native Hailey Mireles finished in a tie for 94th with a three round score of 260.

Duke won the tournament with a final score of 914. The Big 12 had two teams in the top five. Oklahoma State finished second, while host Texas came in third. Stacy Lewis from Arkansas won the tournament with the low score of 224.

Even though the Wildcats didn't perform up to the team's expectations, Knight said she did pull some good things from the invitational.

"This is the site of the Big 12 tournament," Knight said. "The girls really like the course. They feel they can play better on this course."



The Big 12 tournament is April 22. The next action for K-State will be March 26-27 at the Mountain View Collegiate in Tucson, Ariz.

CBB | Chaney will return to coach Temple in NIT

PHILADELPHIA — John Chaney will be back to coach Temple in the NIT.

Chaney returns tonight for the Owls' first-round game at Virginia Tech following a three-week suspension for sending in a player to commit hard fouls that left Saint Joseph's senior John Bryant with a broken arm.

The Hall of Fame coach suspended himself for one game before the school extended the punishment to three games after the extent of Bryant's injury was discovered. Chaney then banned himself from the sideline for the Atlantic 10 tournament.

Finding your element

By Jessica Grant
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Now is the time to get your tickets for the Find Your Element Sports and Music Festival.

Find Your Element is an adventure sports and music festival scheduled for April 22-24 at Fancy Creek State Park. The event will feature live music, camping, racing, skateboarding, BMX biking, kayaking, parachuting, mountain biking, trail-running and adventure games.

"The idea for the event was mine," said Karen Loumaster, senior in public relations and event co-coordinator. "I'm part of the Kansas Mountain Biking Patrol and we have been trying to build the sport of mountain biking in this area since the Patrol started about four years ago.

Building trails and providing first aid and mechanical assistance at local sporting events was how we we got involved in the community, but we decided that we needed a big event to really boost local awareness of these trails and the sport. That's when I came up with the idea of a camping festival."

Nate Schotanus, event co-coordinator and head of the Kansas Mountain Biking Patrol, said that there are several purposes for the event.

"Part of promoting the Patrol, as well as following our mission, is to promote the sport of mountain biking as well as recreational trails, land use and advocacy issues," Schotanus said.

This is not an event that caters only to students.

"We will have some family-friendly events on Saturday morning," Loumaster said. "There will be a child-sized mountain bike course, nature walks and other events that cater to families. We planned this because our goal is to make everyone aware of what this area has to offer, college students and permanent residents alike.

"If being outdoors and taking advantage of the trails and other recreational activities brings these groups together, then that's great."

Tickets are in limited supply and can be purchased by going to www.kansasmountainbiking.com. "There isn't a deadline for the ticket sales," Schotanus said. "However, if people wish to wait until after April 1 or the day of the event, the price will increase to $40, and tickets are subject to availability. We only have 500."

Schotanus said those planning to camp should bring camping and all -weather gear.

"We want and encourage people to camp due in part to the fact that beer will be available on site from Boulevard Brewing Company, and we don't want people driving back to town inebriated," he said. "We want people to bring their walking shoes, trail running shoes, bikes, skateboards, etc. Most of all, we want people to bring their friends. The event will go on, rain or shine."

Dan Oldehoeft, Manhattan resident and trail guide for the event, said he hopes Find Your Element brings exposure to the Fancy Creek area.

"If you are a biker or a hiker in the area, the park is a real gem, yet a lot of folks have no idea it's even there," Oldehoeft said. "It's really a geophysical anomaly for this area – I might even call it a landscape freak show. I think the event will boost the visitation to the trail during this summer and fall. I, Nate, Karen and all of the other volunteers have put a great deal of work into the trail, and we just want to see people out there enjoying themselves."

Beastie Boys still rock

Aging hip-hop band withstands test of time, middle age to become one of the most influential musical groups

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"You gotta' fight / for your right / to PARTY!"

Anyone who is in earshot of these words will instantly begin head banging as they spill their drinks on their girlfriends while trying to scream the chorus. The irony in this situation is that, most often, the frat boys and booze-hounds who are singing this song in drunken abandon are the very people that the Beastie Boys are parodying on their debut album, "Licensed to Ill."

The Beastie Boys began with Mike Diamond (Mike D), Adam Yauch (MCA), drummer Kate Schellenbach and guitarist John Berry in 1981. The band became immersed in the underground punk and post-punk scene in New York. By 1983, Schellenbach and Berry had left the band and were replaced by Adam Horovitz (Ad-Rock).

In 1984, The Beasties joined Def Jam, a label begun by metal head and hip-hop fanatic Rick Rubin and his colleague Russell Simmons. The trio had its first national exposure while opening for Madonna on her Virgin tour. "Licensed to Ill" was released in 1986.

Many critics and hip-hop fans claimed that The Beasties were bastardizing hip-hop with their mix of metal and rap, and conservative groups felt the group's lyrics were immoral and met the album with much disdain. This didn't stop it from becoming Columbia Record's fastest selling debut in history, selling more than 750,000 copies in the first six weeks. During the subsequent tour, the Boys were met with many arrests and lawsuits due to their antics both on and off the stage.

In 1988, the Boys became involved in a lawsuit with Rubin, who claimed that it was he that was to thank for The Beastie Boys' success. When they were finally free, the Boys relocated to California, where they met with the Dust Brothers. By intertwining samples, scratches and excellent rhymes, The Beastie Boys, along with their producers, created not only the best rap album of the 1980s, but also one of the best albums of all time. Unfortunately, critics and fans met the album with a luke-warm response. "Paul's Boutique" quickly fell into obscurity.

In the early 1990s, The Beastie Boys built their own studio and created their own record label, Grand Royal. Their next record, "Check Your Head," combined hip-hop, punk, funk and many other genres as The Beastie Boys played most of the live instruments for this excellent album. In early 1994, "Ill Communication" was released. This was essentially an musical extension of "Check Your Head." The singles "Sabotage" and "Sure Shot" propelled the album into double-platinum status.

The Beastie Boys took time out of their career to focus on their label. In 1996, Adam Yauch organized a concert series in order to raise awareness about Tibet's plight under China's control. The concert eventually became an annual event.

"Hello Nasty," The Beastie Boys' fifth album, was released in summer 1998. The album saw the Boys return to a more densely constructed sound similar to "Paul's Boutique." Singles such as "Intergalactic" ensured that the album was a hit.

It had been six years since The Beastie Boys released an album, but in 2004, "To the 5 Boroughs" was recorded and released. The world had changed much, and The Beastie Boys, all almost 40, were no longer the groundbreaking artists they once were.

They proved to have weathered the storm of middle age, however, by creating an album that returned to the roots of classic hip-hop. The album provided some of the most solemn ("An Open Letter to NYC," "Time to Build") and fun ("Ch-Check It Out," "Triple Trouble") material the Boys had ever released.

With a career lasting more than two decades and six essential albums, The Beastie Boys signature sound of sampling, mixing rock and rap, and playful rhymes between Mike-D, Ad-Rock, and MCA, has been extremely successful. Proving to be as important now as ever, The Beastie Boys are one of the most important musical groups of all time, rap or otherwise.

"Ill Communication": An extension of "Check Your Head"; the album went multi-platinum, thanks to singles such as the amazing "Sabotage."

"Check Your Head": Creating their Grand Royal label, The Beastie Boys created an extremely diverse album. By mixing punk, rock, funk, hip-hop and many other styles, the Boys played their instruments and created one of the best alternative albums of the 1990s.

"To the 5 Boroughs": The world had changed, and The Beastie Boys knew it. They returned to their roots of old school hip-hop and created an album that asks America to come together and move on from tragedy. An excellent late-career album.

"Licensed to Ill": The Beastie Boys' first album produced by Rick Rubin. Its mix of hip-hop and heavy-metal rifts set the stage for the variety of pop music found in the 1990s.

"Hello Nasty": The Beastie Boys returned fully to rap and created an unbelievably dense sonic collage of an album. "Intergalactic" is memorable for both its hook and creative music video.

"Paul's Boutique": The Beastie Boys' masterpiece. By making a love-letter to New York, The Beastie Boys, along with producers The Dust Brothers, created an extremely original album full of densely orchestrated sounds, samples and rhymes. This album's importance and greatness is only now beginning to be realized.

The taste of homemade away from mom

By Kt McBratney
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

If you're looking for a home-cooked meal away from home, head to Grizzly's Grill off Seth Child Road and Anderson Avenue in Plaza West. Ranking high on food quality, price, atmosphere and location, Grizzly's is a return to classic Midwestern food and friendliness.

There are no concerns about portion size here. The whole order of chicken fried steak takes a sizing cue from the Flintstones, barely fitting on the plate. Tender and not overly breaded, it lives up to expectations as the house specialty. As with all Grizzly's specialty dinners, it comes with a choice of three of 12 classic side dishes like baked beans, corn on the cob and french fries. The desert menu boasts over a dozen varieties of pie. Prices are very reasonable, with all entrees under $10 and most around $6-7.

The wait to be seated was less than five minutes, despite a steady stream of parties. The service was attentive and friendly without seeming forced or formal. The waitstaff's casual demeanor did not interfere with prompt and polite service, but added to the laid-back feeling.

Drinks and appetizers were served quickly, and the food arrived right as the appetizer was finished.

The country kitchen decor complimented the home-style menu.

The checkered curtains, warm colors and somewhat obvious bear theme could easily pass for Grandma's place. There was no problem seeing your food, as abundant light came from the center of several ceiling fans and from wall lanterns. The only atmospheric inconsistency was the Top 40 radio station providing background music. Most people don't equate Madonna's "Vogue" with chicken fried steak.

While easy to find and conveniently located, Grizzly's is sandwiched in a long row of restaurants and is barely visible anywhere beyond the parking lot.

Not the place for sophisticated upscale dining, Grizzly's is ideal for those seeking a meal that tastes homemade without having to visit the folks or break the bank.

CELEB NEWS

American Idol drops out

Mario Vazquez is insisting his decision to drop out of Fox's "American Idol" talent search is due to personal reasons. Fans were buzzing Monday on why such a popular contender would forfeit "Idol" fame.

"My intuition told me I need to focus on some personal areas in my life," Vazquez told the local morning show "Good Day Live" on Monday in his hometown of New York. "I needed to take care of that first. To me, that meant I couldn't continue on the competition."

Vazquez's own mother, Ada, didn't know about his decision until a local reporter showed up at her doorstep.

"Ai Dios mio," she told Fox 5 News. "I do not know. I heard it from your mouth so I do not know what's happening. I feel horrible about it."

Hoffman, Rickman to star in 'Perfume' feature film

Dustin Hoffman and Alan Rickman are set for roles in the feature film adaptation of Patrick Suskind's international best seller "Perfume: The Story of a Murderer." Constantin Film is producing the project, for which the two actors have been touted since the fall.

Hoffman will play Giuseppe Baldini, the perfume maker, and Rickman will be Antoine, the merchant father of a young woman who becomes the subject of obsession for Jean-Baptiste Grenouille, the central character in the film, to be played by British actor Ben Whishaw.

Grenouille's obsession turns to murder when he seeks to bottle the scent of the beautiful young virgin. The tale is set in 18th century Paris.

Additional materials including a statement of teaching and publications advising philosophy are welcomed. Please send electronic submissions and inquiries to Pat Hudgins at phudgin@ksu.edu. The Collegian: Student Publications Inc. students have been producing the Collegian for K-State students since 1896. With a press run of 11,000 each weekday morning of fall and spring semesters, the paper is one of the state's largest morning dailies. Funding comes from Student Activity fees and from the student advertising staff that sells more than $500,000 in display advertising each year. The summer Collegian is published Wednesdays in June and July. The Collegian is one of the nation's most honored college newspapers. In Spring 2003 and 2004 the Collegian received a Gold Crown award from the Columbia Scholastic Press Association and in 2002 and 2004 won the Apple Award for best of show at the convention from the College Media Advisers. The Collegian is a frequent recipient of the Pacemaker Award from the College Media Advisers. For more information go to http://www.spub.ksu.edu. Student Publications Inc. is an independent, $1.3 million corporation that publishes the Kansas State Collegian newspaper, the Royal Purple yearbook and the K-State Phone Book. With more than 150 students on its payroll, Student Publications Inc. is one of the university's largest student employers. Five full time staff members assist the director in supporting the student staffs. The School: The K-State journalism and mass communications program is one of the oldest in the nation dating back to 1910. The Miller School has four sequences— advertising, electronic media, journalism (including electronic news), and public relations. The undergraduate program has been rated among the 20 best in the country. The Miller School, which is privately endowed, is the largest academic unit within the College of Arts and Sciences and the largest major on campus with an undergraduate enrollment of about 660. The graduate program offers a M.S. in Mass Communications with an enrollment of 30 students. The Miller School is fully accredited by ACEJMC. The University: Kansas State University, a comprehensive public education and research institution, was founded in 1863 and is one of the first three land grant institutions. It is located in Manhattan, KS, about 120 miles west of Kansas City. The Manhattan campus serves about 21,000 students. Kansas State University ranks first nationally among state universities in its number of Rhodes, Marshall, Truman, Goldwater and Udall scholars. Go to http://www.ksu.edu/ and http://www.k-state.edu/pa/statinfo/factbook. A copy of the university handbook which includes employment and promotion policies and procedures is available at http://www.k-state.edu/academicservices/fhbook/. The City: Manhattan has a permanent population of about 50,000. Located in the beautiful Flint Hills of north central Kansas, Manhattan is the county seat for Riley County and the retail center and medical hub for several counties. The town boasts a quality of life that includes an abundance of parks, an accredited zoo, recreation facilities and arts programs. The school system is considered one of the best in the state. MURRAY | Jury begins deliberations in murder trial

Bob Eye, Murray's attorney, opened the argument for the defense by pointing to the instructions given to jurors at the onset of the trial. In the first instruction directed toward the jury, Eye pointed out that the "state had the burden to prove (Murray's) guilt... beyond a reasonable doubt." The defense argues that there is no actual physical evidence that indicates Murray was in Ross' house on Nov. 13, 2003.

"After you've heard the state's concluding remarks, you will still have reasonable doubts about Tom Murray's guilt. If so, your verdict must be not guilty," Eye said.

As the prosecution provided its closing arguments, it presented a calendar of events that it believes shows proof that Nov. 13, 2003, was the ideal time at which Murray could have killed Ross. The prior and following weeks, their daughter would have been with Ross and all other days Murray was teaching classes. He also knew she would be out of town around Thanksgiving and by the first of December, Larry Lima, Ross' fiancé, was moving to Lawrence.

Testimony by forensic investigators found phrases entered by Murray into Yahoo that prosecutors believe can point to his guilt in this crime. In the two months prior to Ross' murder, Murray entered phrases such as "the best way to kill someone."

The defense said that Murray was thinking about writing a crime scene TV script and he was doing research for the project.

"The only CSI script you see is the one (Murray) starred in," said Wilson in her hour-long closing argument.

Eye, in his opening of the closing statement, pointed out to the jury that all of the prosecution's evidence was circumstantial.

Also in her argument, Wilson described Ross' last moments of life in her home as she was being attacked.

"So her killer with his non-dominant hand picked her up and held her and plunged the knife into her neck 13 more times. Thirteen times," Wilson said. "This was a person who was bent on murder... Carmin Ross was unquestionably the victim of a violent, planned murder."

BROCK | Professor promotes retirement planning

"I teach a business and economic reporting class and I am astounded at how much some students don't know about saving money," he said.

Brock was offered the opportunity to take early retirement, but he said he was just not the retiring type. He grew up in Indiana and liked Kansas.

He has taught at New York University and was an editor and reporter for The New York Times, The Wall Street Journal, The Houston Chronicle and The Louisville-Courier Journal.

Tom Grimes, associate professor of journalism and mass communications, said Brock's appearance on the news will have a positive effect on the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications.

"It is appropriate for us to have someone who is comparable in journalism and publications," he said.

Grimes said he agrees with Brock's idea that students should start saving as soon as they get out of school. He also said credit cards are awful. He tried to get himself away from credit cards years ago and he agreed that cards damage your credit.

"I think we have an opportunity for faculty to fulfill the void for public intellectuals," he said. "Fred may help us in some small way meet the challenge of being public intellectuals, in which, right now there are very few."

The kids love math-bingo," she said.

Sonia Rosales, a senior in sociology, has been involved with the tutoring program for three years and volunteers about 5 1/2 hours a week. She goes to both the Manhattan Catholic School and the Douglass Center to tutor.

"It can be tiring, but the kids are really funny and they keep me amused. It is very rewarding to watch their grades get better," Rosales said.

Ashley Cox, a second-year student in horticulture, has been working with CSP tutoring for two years.

Currently, she works 12 hours a week at Ogden Elementary school doing an after school program with kindergartners and at the Douglass Center.

"Working with the kids and watching them grow has taught me a lot about how they develop and learn in different ways," Cox said.

She also said that she has gained a lot of patience through working with the kids.

"It's my favorite to work with the kindergartners. I miss them when I'm not there. They're always happy to see me," Cox said.

Currently, CSP has 32 tutors, 25 of which are receiving the $250 scholarship. Applicants must have at least a 3.0 grade point average, Harding said. Requests can be made for particular age groups or tutoring subjects; however, sometimes tutors are placed wherever they are needed most.

was happy to just qualify for the final, and she was honored to be named an All-American.

"I was happy to qualify for finals, and after that I did my best to try to set a personal best, and I did, so I was pretty happy with that," she said. "It is awesome to be an All-American. I am so happy and I want to thank God. It is an honor for me, and I cannot explain what I feel with words."

Darius Draudvila, one of three Wildcat seniors who earned All-America status, led the men's team with a fifth place finish in the heptathlon by scoring a personal best 5,567 points.

Junior Coby Cost was the only other K-State men's team member to score points, as he captured sixth place in the weight throw.

In K-State track and field history, the men and women have combined for 145 NCAA Indoor All-America awards.

The University of Arkansas, who hosted the meet, won its 18th men's championship since 1984 (56 points), and the University of Tennessee won its first ever women's title (46 points).

weekend."

One positive aspect of the Wildcats' play this weekend was the performance of freshman Tamar Kvaratskhelia.

Kvaratskhelia tied the single-season freshman win record with her 22nd singles win against Oklahoma's Irina Lykina.

She tied Petra Sedlmajerova for the win record and also secured the highest career singles win percentage in K-State history.

Bietau said his squad counts on a good outing from Kvaratskhelia every time the Wildcats take the court.

"She's a point we have counted on," he said. "She's a plus for us every time she takes the court."

Bietau said he can't say for certain what his team's difficulty on the road this season can be attributed to.

"If I knew exactly what the problem is I would tell you quickly," he said. "We need to be mentally prepared, be ready to play and be ready to respond when challenged."

The Wildcats will try for their first road win of the spring season this Sunday in Waco, Texas, against Baylor.

No verdict in Murray trial

Jury still deliberating evidence against professor

By Carl Manning
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Defense attorneys and prosecutors said Tuesday they don't expect a quick verdict in the case of a K-State professor charged with killing his former wife.

The first-degree murder trial of Thomas E. Murray, 48, began Feb. 17 and ended Monday with closing arguments. He is accused of the 2003 death of Carmin D. Ross, 40.

The Douglas County District Court jury of eight women and four men deliberated for an hour Monday afternoon, resuming work Tuesday morning. Jurors spent the day in the jury room, where they worked through lunch and took occasional short breaks throughout the day. They went home around 5 p.m. without reaching a verdict and were scheduled to be back Wednesday morning.

"They've got a lot to talk about. There is no shortage of evidence to review," defense attorney Bob Eye said. "It will require some time to separate the wheat from the chaff."

At one point Tuesday, a television set and VCR were brought into the jury room, presumably so jurors could review a lengthy videotape of Murray talking to investigators during which he denied killing Ross. Murray did not testify during the trial.

"I don't think this jury would make this decision, one way or the other, without looking at the video again," Angela Wilson, an assistant district attorney, said.

Wilson said the jury has some 400 prosecution and defense exhibits, mainly documents and photographs. Asked if she was concerned about the deliberations, Wilson said, "Not this early in a four-week trial."

Also defense attorneys met Tuesday with Murray, who was in a detention cell at the Douglas County Judicial and Law Enforcement Center, Eye said. He characterized Murray as "composed and certainly concerned."

As the jury met, family members waited in the district attorney's office. Ross' fiance, Larry Lima, of San Diego, said he would accept whatever verdict is returned.

CBS news program 48 Hours visited K-State Tuesday, becoming the latest national media outlet to spotlight the murder trial of English professor Thomas Murray.

News correspondent Richard Schlesinger interviewed two of Murray's former students, Jessica Grant, senior in English, and J.D. Garber, senior in secondary education, as well as Collegian editor in chief Sarah Rice.

Rice said 48 Hours was interested in the case as well as the Collegian's involvement in covering the trial.

"It's an interesting case – just the fact that it's a professor who students were so fond of and now he is on trial for murder," she said. "It seems so unreal."

Kansas State Collegian editor in chief Sarah Rice and managing editor Matt Girard work on today's edition of the newspaper while being filmed for an issue of 48 Hours on the topic of the Thomas Murray murder trial.

Both Grant and Garber described Murray as a likable and respected professor.

Grant was a student of Murray's when his ex-wife Carmin Ross was murdered and was later subpoenaed to testify.

Wooldridge to remain coach for another season

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The speculation is over.

K-State men's basketball head coach Jim Wooldridge will be back for a sixth season, Director of Athletics Tim Weiser announced Tuesday.

After the Wildcats (17-12) received word on Sunday night that they did not receive a bid for the National Invitation Tournament, media, fans and alumni had questions on Wooldridge's future, but no answers came from the athletic department on Monday.

Wefald

Weiser

The silence ended Tuesday afternoon.

"In some cases, we did make expectations and others we didn't," Weiser said of the season. "When we looked at it as a whole, there was more reason to go forward than to start over."

Weiser said he met with President Jon Wefald Tuesday morning to talk over the situation. Then, Wooldridge was brought into the discussion. Around noon, a decision was made.

When asked if he felt his job was in jeopardy following K-State's season-ending loss to the University of Kansas in the Big 12 Tournament on Friday, Wooldridge said his thoughts were far from himself.

"I haven't been concerned about it since," Wooldridge said. "I've been concerned about the players, because at that juncture we thought we'd be in the NIT, and when we didn't get in, our concern went back to the players."

The failure to make the NIT put the spotlight on Wooldridge's job quicker than expected.

"The fact we didn't get into the NIT caught all of us off guard," Weiser said.

Prior to Tuesday's decision, much was made of conversations between Wooldridge and Weiser last spring, when the athletic director gave his coach a two-year extension to the original five-year contract that was to conclude after this season.

It was widely reported that Weiser told Wooldridge the program needed to improve in several areas, which included attendance, conference wins and qualifying for the postseason.

Though attendance was up this season to the highest average since 1999-2000, the Wildcats' six conference wins were the same as the season before, and the team did not qualify for the NIT or NCAA Tournament for the fifth time in five years under Wooldridge.

However, Weiser said there were more upsides than downsides in keeping Wooldridge as the head man.

Text messaging frenzy

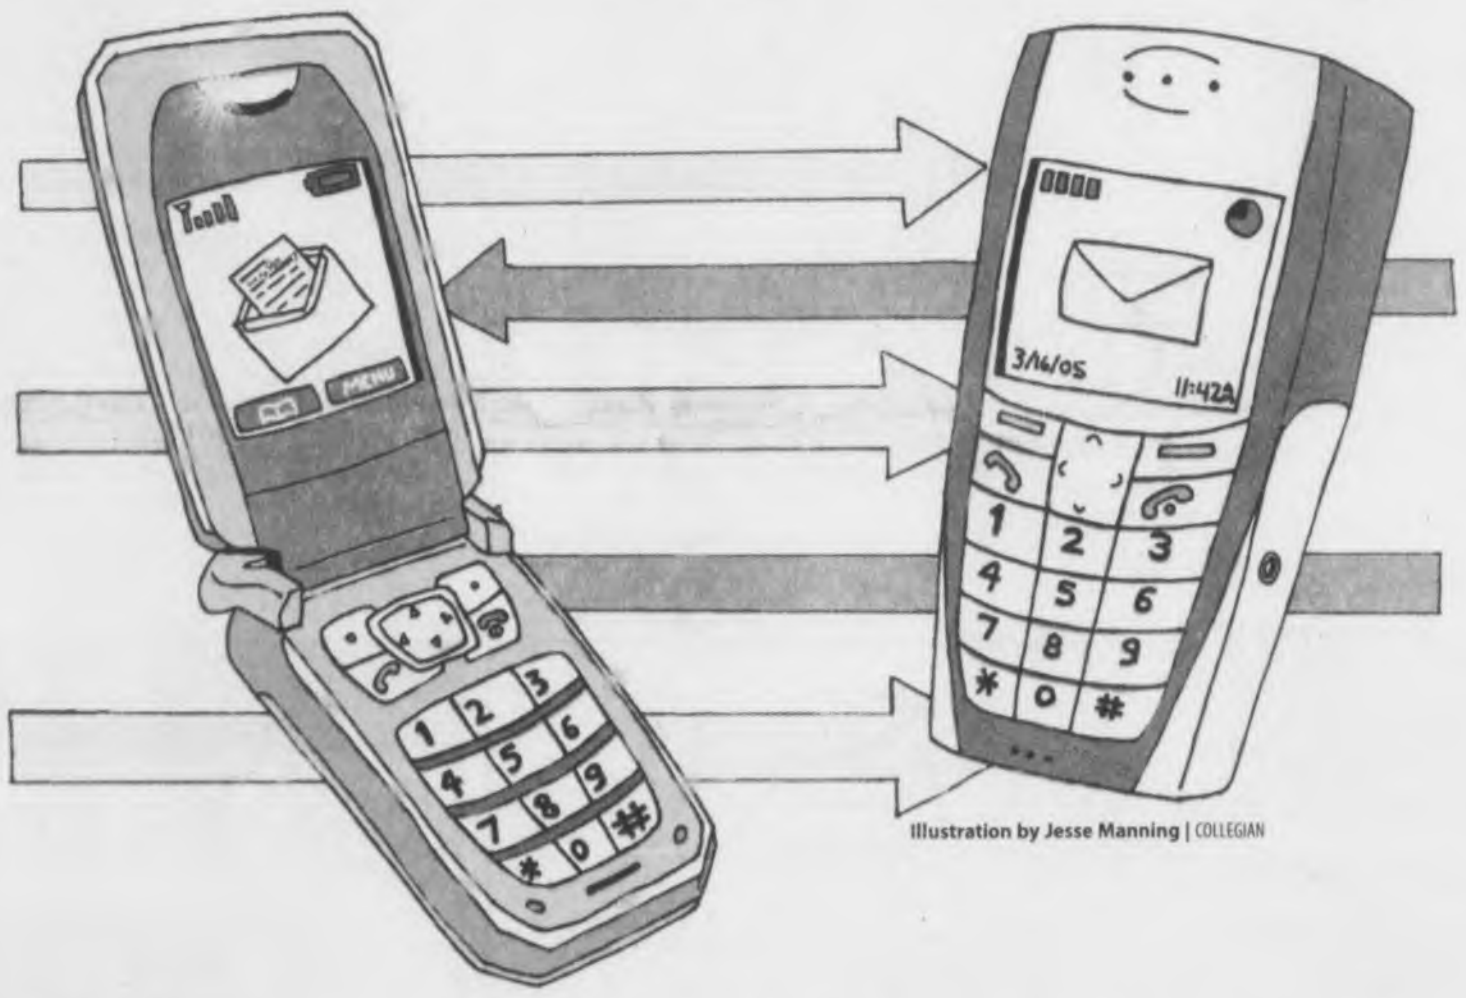

Illustration by Jesse Manning | COLLEGIAN

Cell phone communication can be costly

By Humberto Gonzalez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's a wave of technology.

Text messaging has become popular among students, and they're even doing it in class.

Most cell phone companies carry it as a feature on their rate plans.

If students choose not to carry text messaging on their plan, other charges may occur. To send and receive messages using Sprint, it costs 10 cents per message. With T-Mobile, it's five cents, and with Alltel, it costs 10 cents to send a message, but only two cents to receive one.

Kimberlie Wilson, sophomore in pre-health, uses Alltel to text her boyfriend, John Posten, about four to five times daily.

"I added text messaging on my cell phone plan because I knew I would be using it quite often," she said.

Wilson said she also uses the feature while in class.

She finds herself messaging mostly in her History 251 lecture class, partly out of boredom, she said. She also would rather text instead of call sometimes.

"It's quieter, and I've got so much to say," Wilson said.

Sometimes, though, text messaging can rack up a bill.

Megan Brandt, junior in family and career finance, said she text messages her friends most often in class due to boredom. She mainly does in her human geography class.

She was recently billed $182.38 from Sprint for text usage.

"It was the worst day of my life," she said.

Brandt said her fiancé Colin Crume, sophomore in political science, helped pay the bill.

"It is difficult to find the funds for this, but we will manage," Crume said.

Nate Gray, Sprint sales representative, said when text messaging is used often, people should have it included in their plan.

"Text messaging has become very popular, but it is wise to add text messaging to a plan instead of paying additional charges," he said. "Many people don't realize that those messages add up quite a bit."

Jeffrey Smith, associate professor of geography, said he definitely sees texting in his class.

Smith said there is nothing he can do to make it stop because he does not want to disrupt the class discussion.

"Students make decisions every day, and it is unfortunate that students spend their time text messaging rather than participating in the class discussion," he said.

Knitting becoming common hobby among students

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. – Knitting is coming back into style. Although it is a fun hobby, it can also be used as a helpful tool for those in need.

University of Arkansas freshman Oakleigh Elise Roberts said that knitting is an addictive hobby. She first learned to knit during her senior year of high school. Roberts was part of her school's knitting club, which was called the Psycho Knitters, she said. She is now able to knit scarves and baby blankets.

Roberts continues to knit and said she relieves stress by knitting.

Courtney Sparks, the vice president of Resident Interhall Congress, decided that knitting could serve a purpose other than relaxation and enjoyment.

Sparks started a program in RIC called Knitting for the Needy. The purpose of the program is to construct a blanket that will be donated to the American Red Cross, she said.

The program's main event took place Feb. 17 in Gibson Hall when RIC senators joined together and learned how to knit. Each participating senator was asked to knit one square of the blanket.

Sparks said the majority of the participating senators were girls, but a few guys attended the program.

Sparks said she has been knitting for more than a year and a half. She began when she saw someone with a self-made scarf and decided to take up knitting as something to do while watching television.

It is also good to see a finished product and have something to be proud of, she said.

She said that she spent eight months on her first scarf, and that it takes practice to knit at a fast pace.

"The more you knit, the faster you get at it," Sparks said.

SOME SEE ACUPUNCTURE AS PRACTICAL

MINNEAPOLIS – Once considered a nontraditional medical procedure, an increasing number of patients, doctors and university students are recognizing acupuncture as a practical medical treatment.

For some, like first-year University of Minnesota student Sarah Murn, it was the only alternative that proved effective.

"Two years ago, I had a back injury playing soccer. I turned on the ball and fell on my lower back, and I couldn't walk at all," Murn said. "The day I got acupuncture, I walked out."

Patricia Culliton, a licensed acupuncturist in the Hennepin County Medical Center's alternative medicine division and instructor at the University's Center for Spirituality and Healing, said treatment starts with consultation.

"We have you go into a private room where you are interviewed about all of your symptoms," Culliton said. "Then, we find a series of points that would affect all of these symptoms.

"The procedure is cooling and calming. We have you lay down on the table with heating pads. Then, we painlessly slide very thin needles that stimulate circulation of 'chi,' which, in Western terms, means it promotes blood circulation."

She said the procedure is said to be so relaxing that patients fall asleep during a 20- to 30-minute process.

The procedure is most commonly used for treatment of back, head, neck and shoulder pain. It can also treat headaches, women's reproductive health problems, acid reflux and liver disease, Culliton said.

YOGA: HELPING STUDENTS LOWER STRESS, PASS TESTS

COLUMBUS, Ohio – Yoga poses and breathing techniques can be used by all Ohio State University students to reduce exam-related stress. Serene Tree. Energized Warrior. Pliant Cobra. These are all poses used in residence halls, apartments and yoga classes around campus to help relive stress.

Maryanna Klatt, assistant professor of family medicine, said yoga can help students unwind during stressful times such as exam week.

"Yoga can be a proactive approach to doing your best on finals," she said.

Klatt also said that yoga can be done at anytime by anyone.

"The best time to do yoga is in the morning before starting your day, (but) yoga stretches can even be done from your chair as you study for exams," she said.

Mike Wofford, sophomore in early childhood development, gave examples Wednesday of poses that can be done in a chair including shoulder shrugs to relieve tension.

Another simple exercise students can do, Klatt said, is to elevate the buttocks with a towel while sitting in a chair when you are studying. It encourages deep breathing which allows your body to receive more oxygen.

According to Wailana.com, a Web site dedicated to the yoga lifestyle, 10 minutes of yoga a day can make a difference in one's level of stress.

Term to start 2 weeks later for president, senators

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's official.

Newly elected students will start their Student Governing Association terms in two weeks.

The turnover for new senators and the next student body president and vice president is April 14.

Hayley Urkevich, student body president, said six of the nine college councils ratified the amendment, which is all that was needed.

Student Senate passed the amendments last year, before the turnover, but the ratification process never happened. The amendment changes turnover time from three to five weeks.

Urkevich said the realization that the amendments hadn't been ratified didn't occur until the elections had started this year.

On April 14, Senate will meet as usual, and when the meeting is over, the new senators will be sworn in.

"The old Senate will meet and finish their meeting and then the new Senate meets and is sworn in," she said. "In a way, there are two Senate meetings."

The extension allows senators to finish up everything that needs to be done, Urkevich said.

"I think, in a way, it's definitely useful," she said. "I'd probably get it done anyways."

Elections Commissioner David McCandless said it is just the Senate and presidential positions that are affected by the change.

President-elect Michael Burns said the change in the term time doesn't affect his and Vice President-elect Grant Groene's plans much.

Burns said they plan to begin distributing applications for cabinet positions after spring break.

"We will begin that transition right after spring break," he said. "That was going to happen at the end of spring break, regardless if it was the three or five weeks."

The extension will help Burns, in his current position as privilege fee committee chair, to finish out some bills that might not have gone through before, he said.

Urkevich said she and Vice President Erik Ankrom plan to give Burns and Groene advice for their term, which is something she didn't have.

"Because of that I really think it is important to do so this year," she said. "A lot of it really is a kind of learn as you go."

Flag stolen from plaza

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Police is investigating a theft reported in the Bosco Student Plaza.

Jack Connaughton, associate director of the K-State Student Union, said a K-State flag was stolen and the rod the flag was on was bent by two men between 2:30 and 3 a.m. Sunday.

The incident was videotaped by surveillance cameras and was turned over to campus police Monday afternoon.

Campus police Capt. Richard Herrman said at this point there is no suspect. He said the captain in charge of investigations is out of town this week so there is no way to know how far he is with the investigation.

Herrman said the damage comes to about $25. However, Connaughton estimated the damage at about $100.

Connaughton said this is not the first time theft has occurred in the plaza.

"It's about the fourth or fifth time on the flags since 2001 when the plaza opened," he said.

Herrman said the last time a flag was stolen was in summer 2004.

Although the suspects were caught on videotape, Herrman said that may not be enough to find out who it was.

"You can have a video of somebody but nobody knows who that person is. You have to identify them," he said.

If evidence from the surveillance tape is found sufficient to charge the suspects, Herrman said they would either be issued tickets or turned over to the city court. If the case was turned over to the city court, the city attorney would have to investigate the case further to determine if a warrant should be put out to arrest the suspects.

"This would be done if our investigative officer doesn't feel comfortable writing a ticket, if he has a shadow of a doubt," he said.

However, Herrman said because it is a misdemeanor case, the investigative officer will more than likely issue a ticket.

Honor societies a boost for job applications, service work

By Amy Bolton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Membership in honor societies may give students an advantage when applying for jobs.

Peggy Frazier, the branch manager of the downtown Capitol Federal Savings branch, said that while they don't specifically look for honor societies on resumes, if the competition is very close between two applicants and one is in an honor society and another isn't, it may give a boost to the applicant with an honor society membership.

"I don't know so much if an employer looks for that," Frazier said, "but it does outshine another applicant."

Blue Key, Mortar Board and Golden Key International Honor Society are just a few of the exclusive honor societies available to students with exceptional grades who want to serve and lead in their school and community. Members of all three groups pay membership dues to join.

Mortar Board is an honor society for seniors who apply in the spring of their junior year, said Janice Wissman, Mortar Board adviser and associate dean of the College of Education.

"Members are chosen on the basis of exemplary leadership, scholarship and service," Wissman said.

New members are chosen by current members based on their applications and leadership, scholarship and service.

Mortar Board members coordinate the Kansas Academic Decathlon – a national competitive academic event for high school students, usher at Landon Lectures and read to children at local day cares every week, said Victoria Luhrs, Mortar Board president and senior in secondary education.

"They're not just given the honor of being chosen, they're also expected to unite together to continue to serve the campus and the community," Wissman said.

Jeffrey Smith, Golden Key co-adviser and associate professor of geography, said that the purpose of Golden Key is to bring together students who have similar educational aspirations, to provide a way to serve their community and to recognize students who have achieved these successes.

"Their goal is to help the community," Smith said.

Members have participated in Adopt-A-Lot at the Peters Recreation Complex, where they clean up the parking lots and pick up trash and debris. They also made cards and delivered them to retirement homes and created coloring books they distributed to children at hospitals, said Tyler Suelter, Golden Key president and senior in biology and chemistry.

Membership in Golden Key is by invitation only, Suelter said. Golden Key's national standards only admit students in the top 15 percent of their class, but since the Office of the Registrar does not keep track of class percentages, invitations are sent to every K-State student with a 3.5 GPA or above in their junior or higher year, Suelter said.

Blue Key is a senior honorary for students dedicated to leadership. Students apply in the spring of their junior year for membership during their senior year.

"Their mission is to provide leadership development to other students on campus," said Jackie McClaskey, assistant dean of the College of Agriculture and a Blue Key adviser.

Some of the events Blue Key holds are leadership conferences for high school students, leadership symposiums for the presidents of groups on campus and leadership workshops for campus organizations, McClaskey said.

They also coach freshmen and sophomore students who are in the Catalyst program and select and mentor students in Quest, the freshmen leadership honorary, she said.

Focusing on leadership is a way for Blue Key members to help their community.

"It's a non-traditional way of doing community service. It's in human capital development," McClaskey said.

Imagining James Bond in Kansas

Illustrations by Elvis Achelpohl | COLLEGIAN

DAVID LIANG

Every so often, I hear someone complaining about the relative obscurity of Kansas in the movie industry and how the only thing it's remembered for is that proverbial yellow brick road from "The Wizard of Oz." Why can't Kansas be associated with something cooler?

Something like James Bond, maybe?

Now that's a novel concept. Think about it: when was the last time you saw the suave super-spy in the Sunflower State? You haven't. In all of the James Bond series' 40-plus years on the silver screen, Kansas has not even been mentioned but once in the 1971 flick "Diamonds are Forever."

The scene goes like this: Ernst Stavro Blofeld (the evil genius after whom Dr. Evil from "Austin Powers" was modeled) has built a powerful laser satellite. Like any self-respecting super villain would, he intends to use it to hold the world hostage. At one point, he notes that his satellite was in orbit over Kansas and that he could easily incinerate it with the touch of a button.

But Blofeld quickly dismisses the idea. "Well," he says nonchalantly, "if we destroy Kansas, the world may not hear about it for years!"

So after 20 movies, what does Kansas get? A passing, blasé insult.

But all that's going to change. Rumor has it that in the next installment, the world's favorite spy will be met in customary fashion by a local operative at KCI Airport. As Bond steps onto the tarmac from his private jet, he will utter the immortal words, "The name's Bond. James Bond. Licensed to kill."

"They call me Bob. Billy 'Bob' Jones," his opposite Kansan operative will reply, "Licensed to rodeo."

They can compare drinks. Bond has his signature "Martini, shaken, not stirred." Bob, on the other hand, favors "Bud Light, chilled, not warmed."

And consider their wardrobes. Bond's handmade suits are purchased from a tailor in uptown London. Bob gets his checkered shirts and jeans from Wal-Mart.

Bond's vehicle of choice is the latest Aston Martin offering, while Bob prefers to keep it real with the Ford F-series trucks.

The setting in an unfamiliar, rural location will inject fresh impetus into an aging franchise. We've all seen car chases, shoot-outs, explosions and break-ins at random nuclear facilities in Russia. All the Bonds from Sean Connery to Pierce Brosnan have been there, done that.

What I'd like to see in the next movie is 007 playing a game of bull poker with three other cowboys. The four will sit around a table in the middle of an arena playing cards while an angry bull is set loose. The last person to chicken out of the game - which will be Bond - wins.

Now that's a stunt sequence. Should he not make it, Kansans will be able to boast that they're the only ones who've actually managed to kill Bond.

Then there's the diabolical megalomaniac. Thirsting for totalitarian control, the Bond villain must be dismissive of his opponents and be willing to execute his plans without mercy. My vote goes to the generic parking services guy.

Armed with a ticketing machine, our parking services man is able to dish out misery to helpless college students instantly with the touch of a few buttons. He would allow Bond to make his usual throwaway lines like, "Well, parking guy. I like your aftershave. And is that a clamping tool in your pants, or are you just pleased to see me?"

No matter how you look at it, Kansas has all the essential ingredients for a formalistic Bond movie. Start e-mailing the producers. You might just get a role as an extra.

Managing stress with scheduling, siestas key to sanity, survival in college

JULIA STOSKOPF

Stress – good, bad or useful – is something that all students have to deal with.

While this stress may be the force that drives procrastinators to pull all-nighters before exams and those students involved in everything to literally pull their hair out strand by strand, students must also be wary of their levels of stress so that they do not become living zombies whose life force consists of fast food and caffeine.

It is important to understand that high levels of stress are detrimental in the good-old fashioned way of increased susceptibility to heart attack and stroke.

For younger students who do not necessarily pay attention to or care about what happens 30 years down the road, too much stress can also affect students' lives now.

Care to disagree? Take a look at the students in the library.

One student is simply stopping in to send a quick e-mail to a professor between classes. The other has stayed in the exact same room all day, cramming for the mid-term tomorrow that could have been studied for earlier in the week, but between meetings and classes... get the picture?

Since this situation is common the only issue becomes this question: how can I lower levels of stress?

Easy – don't do so much. Don't take so many classes; don't drink so many beers; don't become involved in so many organizations; don't work so much.

Yeah, right.

Since classes are required to graduate, alcohol vital to the very existence of some, organizational involvement absolutely necessary and employment integral to pay for all of the above, the answer becomes significantly more difficult.

Surprisingly, there is a way to escape the all-nighters and hair-pulling. One simple solution simply involves scheduling. While this may seem anal-retentive, a simple list of tasks that have to be done today can be of great assistance. Make a list of the 10 or 15 (or 20, for those truly involved in everything) things that are the most important to do today. Cross off items one by one, and if something doesn't get crossed off, put it on tomorrow's list.

A second solution also involves scheduling, but it must be completed a little more in advance. While classes are necessary, it is possible to create a schedule that fits one's lifestyle.

For those who stay out all night in Aggieville, schedule classes that don't start until mid-morning or afternoon, while still providing enough time for work and a nap before the night's adventures.

For those who are go-getters and involved in multiple organizations, schedule classes that provide 30 minutes in between for a quick power nap. Try a siesta on a lesser scale – a quick rest in the middle of the day may make that night's meeting, community service project or homework that much less stressful.

For those who are athletically inclined, take a jog or head to the Rec for a half-hour. Exercise is a great way to relieve stress.

If those solutions are not possible, take just a few minutes to relax when arriving home from work or school. A couple of minutes of sitting down and clearing the mind can also make a world of difference.

Stress cannot be avoided for the vast majority of college students, but take some time to rejuvenate.

Family, friends, boyfriends, girlfriends and even roommates will be extremely appreciative.

TO THE POINT

Parking an issue for university

The "green" parking zone near campus that has been in existence since the early 1980s has outlived its usefulness and needs to be reconsidered.

The specified zone is an inconvenience to residents, requiring them to have special parking permits for themselves and guests.

It should not be the city's responsibility to place restrictions on parking in neighborhoods close to campus. It should be the university's job to provide enough parking on campus for the number of students who drive to campus each day.

The university knows how many students are enrolled each semester, and parking on campus should be accessible for all students.

Forcing students to go off campus to park creates problems in the neighborhoods near campus for residents and students alike.

Crowded streets make it difficult to navigate safely through neighborhoods and can cause accidents.

The university should address the parking situation immediately to relieve the city from the responsibility of zoning neighborhood streets and issuing fines.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Severe weather preparations

Students learn about Kansas tornadoes

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The staff at Jardine sponsored a seminar Tuesday night to inform their international residents of the dangers presented by tornado season.

Residents gathered in the Community Center talking among themselves in many languages. International residents are at a higher risk from tornadoes and inclement weather than life-long Kansans because they haven't been educated about weather situations indigenous to this area.

Craig Wanklyn, a Jardine resident assistant, said this type of programming really makes an effect on how people live their lives.

"We hope to make this an annual thing because it's important to our residents," Wanklyn said. "There's only so much we can do. Hearing it from someone on TV or with expertise impacts people so much more."

Chief Meteorologist Bruce Jones from KSNT is an adamant campaigner of weather safety.

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN
Bruce Jones, meteorologist for KSNT-TV news of Topeka, speaks at the First Community Center at Jardine for Weather Awareness Day Tuesday evening. Jones spoke to Jardine residents about severe weather in Kansas and what they should do to prepare for it.

"This is the most tornado-prone area on the planet," Jones said. "Not only do we have more, but more of the big ones."

He is particularly committed to educating international students who don't know what to expect or how to deal with severe weather in this magnitude.

"I lived in Turkey, and I know what it's like to live in a foreign country and not know what to expect," Jones said. "Hopefully, we can ease some of their fears and they'll be in much better shape."

Jones said that while tornadoes seem common, only one out of one thousand Kansas thunderstorms will produce a tornado. Residents should also take into consideration that tornadoes only move at about 30 mph when on the ground, he said.

Also, the average tornado is only 200 yards across at the bottom, Jones said. While it can affect a larger area, tornadoes don't have nearly the far-reaching effects of other natural phe-

Riley County advanced voting begins today

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While actual voting does not begin for Manhattan until April 5, advanced voting begins today at the Riley County Office Building.

There are three stipulations to vote in advance. First, voters must be registered. If they are not registered, registration is open until Monday, Rich Vargo, county clerk and election official, said.

Second, patrons must physically come in and vote. The Riley County Office Building is the only place in Manhattan where advanced voting takes place, Jolene Campbell, elections coordinator, said.

"It's required by law (that you come in to vote) because only counties as big as Johnson County and Sedgwick County allow satellite voting to take place," she said.

Third, first-time voters must bring an ID with the address that matches the voter registration address.

Advanced voting is open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday and 8 a.m. to noon on April 2. Advance voting ends at noon on April 4.

Advanced voting, Vargo said, is attractive to citizens for many reasons, but primarily because of convenience and being out of town.

This year, however, they are expecting a bigger advanced voting crowd, Vargo said.

"We're expecting a higher turnout this year with the constitutional amendment question and the sales tax question on the ballot," Vargo said.

Businesses on right track to becoming more responsible

By Matt Gorney
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Businesses need to become more responsible, and they are on the right track, Jeffrey Hollender said during the Lou Douglas lecture Tuesday night.

Hollender, president and corporate responsibility officer of Seventh Generation, said every business says it is responsible, which makes defining business responsibility difficult.

"Corporate responsibility is a challenging thing to do," Hollender said during the lecture. "It's challenging because there are no fixed guidelines for what you should do. My goal is to make you feel more hopeful."

He said there are four factors businesses should focus on in order to become responsible.

Today, it's too expensive not to become responsible; we live in a much different world; the electronic world has created a new level of transparency between businesses and the public; and the business community itself is changing, he said.

"Being a responsible business is not at odds with being a successful company," Hollender said.

Hollender also said businesses have three internal drivers causing change toward a more responsible model.

He said financial results, the effect responsible businesses have on their workers and the positive effect they have on their supply chain is helping motivate the change.

Stephanie Roberts, junior in marketing, said she attended the lecture because she would receive extra credit in one of her classes.

Roberts said she thought the topic was important to college students who are close to graduation and looking for jobs.

"We're getting out there into the real world, and we're going to need to know this stuff in the near future," Roberts said.

Hollender said his goal was for people to understand they can cause changes in how businesses act.

"I want them to take away the critical nature of how they as individuals can help address the problems that we're all concerned about," Hollender said. "They're not powerless; they can make a difference."

He said college students, in particular, are in a unique position.

"College students are the labor pool of tomorrow and the next generation," he said. "It's critical that as college students graduate and go out into the work force, not only do they ask questions of the companies they are working for, but let those companies know they care about working for a responsible business."

Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN
Jeffrey Hollender speaks at the Lou Douglas Lecture Tuesday at Forum Hall. Hollender has written several books on business responsibility and how it affects large businesses.

Hollender was also on hand after the lecture to sign copies of his book, "What Matters Most: The Next Generation of Responsible and Values-Based Leadership."

He said he tells people who think his ideas about responsibility will only hurt business that it's time to change their thinking.

"I say 'they're wrong,' and the facts don't support them," Hollender said. "They're holding onto an understanding and a view of business that's no longer correct. Unfortunately, when change takes place, it take awhile for everyone to catch on to the fact that the world is different than it used to be.

"The facts and statistics, I think, clearly support that responsible businesses do better financially," he said.

Ordinance in place to reduce dangerous traffic conditions

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The City of Manhattan has different colored zones where parking without permits is not allowed.

The "green zone" extends from Vattier Street to Old Claflin Road and Manhattan Avenue to ninth Street. Parking without a permit in these areas from 2 to 9 a.m. is prohibited.

Tina Francis, utility billing supervisor for Manhattan, said the ordinance originated with homeowners in the early 1980s who had students parking in front of their homes.

"The homeowners went to public works to write up an ordinance, which was then passed through City Commission. Since 1981, the ordinance has been modified so many times," she said.

The ordinance has been in existence since 1981. Provisions were made to the ordinance in 1982 and 1983.

Brenda Wolf, executive secretary, said the time frame of the ordinance is original.

"When the ordinance was written, the 2 to 9 a.m. time frame was when problems were occurring. The homeowners or tenants were unable to find a parking space during that time," Wolf said.

Section 1, part A reads the provisions of the ordinance are enacted "to reduce hazardous traffic conditions resulting from the use of streets within [described district for long term storage parking of vehicles by persons not residing within the district."

Francis said residents are only allowed two parking permits and one guest permit per dwelling.

Marilyn Senff, customer service specialist for Manhattan, said permits cost five dollars for each vehicle.

Permits are good as long as the resident has the vehicle but are non-transferable.

Lt. Herb Crosby said the Riley County Police Department writes citations and enforces the ordinance for the city.

"The number of citations varies from time of the year. They are more frequent during the school year," Crosby said.

Crosby said there is no correlation between the green zone ordinance and drinking and driving.

"There is no reason to associate parking in this zone to alcohol," he said.

WOOLDRIDGE | Fifth-year coach's extension honored

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN
K-State men's basketball coach Jim Wooldridge will be retained as coach of the men's team. The announcement was made by Athletic Director Tim Weiser in a news conference Tuesday afternoon.

Wooldridge once again made the case that the program was moving forward.

"Every job is different, every situation is unique," Wooldridge said. "The bottom line is this: we (administration, players, Weiser and Wooldridge) feel like things are getting better. We're making improvement every year."

The Wildcats have increased their win total from 14 last season after two 13-win campaigns and an 11-win season in 2000-2001, Wooldridge's first year.

K-State also returns a core of young players next season that include sophomore starters Lance Harris, Cartier Martin and Fred Peete, and freshman point guard Clent Stewart.

A hot topic surrounding Weiser's move to keep Wooldridge has been the involvement of Wefald.

"It wasn't about Tim Weiser, Jim Wooldridge or me," Wefald said. "It was about what is in the best interest of Kansas State."

Weiser acknowledged Wefald had a role in the decision process and said the two see eye-to-eye perhaps better than they had prior to this week's events.

"It's important for me to say that Jon and I are on the same page," Weiser said. "If we weren't before, we are now."

As a cloud of uncertainty surrounded the men's basketball program, Wooldridge maintained he never brought up the issue of his job security with the players.

"I have never talked to the players about this," Wooldridge said. "I'm not going to address it at all."

While awaiting a decision on Wooldridge's job status, talk radio and message boards raged with debate between those who advocated Wooldridge's dismissal and his supporters.

Weiser said he did have his eyes and ears tuned in to what fans and alumni thought about the situation.

"I wouldn't have an e-mail address on our Web site if I didn't care what fans think," Weiser said.

Now the wait is over for everyone, and one thing is clear – as if the heat was not already on Wooldridge – it will only be intensified next year.

"We'll never measure our program by NIT games," Weiser said. "Our expectations exceed that."

Wefald said optimism was the key in the decision to the retain Wooldridge.

"This is all about hope," Wefald said. "People felt for the first time in years there was hope."

Did you know?

For the decision

- First winning record since 1998-99 season
- Non-losing record the last two seasons (the Wildcats went .500 in the 2003-2004 season)
- Wildcats finished this season winning four of six
- Team returns four starters for next season

Against the decision

- No postseason play in five seasons
- Overall record 68-77, 26-34 Big 12 play
- No wins over ranked opponents this season

NFL | Texans offer contract deal to Orlando Pace

ST. LOUIS — Offered a contract by the Houston Texans, Rams offensive tackle Orlando Pace says "the ball is really in St. Louis' court" in deciding whether to retain the veteran lineman.

Pace

Pace, during a visit Monday with Texans officials, told the Houston Chronicle that negotiations with the Rams are "at a standstill" — what he called typical in recent years, when St. Louis has placed the franchise tag on him.

The Rams have until 3 p.m. Wednesday to sign Pace to a multi-year contract offer. At that point, a four-month negotiating blackout begins for the Rams and Pace, meaning another spring without Pace attending the team's offseason conditioning program, minicamps and training camp for the third year in a row.

MLB | Selig to testify on steroids for Congress

NEW YORK — Major League Baseball gave a congressional committee about 400 pages of documents on drug testing and said commissioner Bud Selig was willing to testify at Thursday's hearing on steroid use.

Selig

Lawyers for Jason Giambi, Frank Thomas and Rafael Palmeiro asked the committee to withdraw subpoenas for their clients, and lawyers for players and the commissioner's office continued to negotiate with committee staff Monday, trying to narrow the scope of questioning.

Former AL MVP Jose Canseco and Schilling are the only players who have said they are willing to appear in Washington on Thursday. Selig, who initially offered a top aide as a substitute, reversed course Monday and offered to appear.

MLB | Royals first-baseman Sweeney close to return

MESA, Ariz. — Kansas City slugger Mike Sweeney missed his fifth spring training game with a sore back, but the Royals said Tuesday the first baseman and designated hitter could return to the lineup Wednesday.

Sweeney

Sweeney hired a new personal trainer, former Royals strength and conditioning coach Chris Mihlfeld, and put himself through intense offseason workouts after missing the last 42 games of the 2004 season because of a herniated disc in his neck.

When he reported to training camp last month, he said he felt "100 percent" for the first time in years. But soreness in his right oblique muscle forced him to scratch himself from the Royals' lineup Friday and he has not played since.

The Royals said that Sweeney's soreness is not related to his previous back and neck problems, which have caused him to miss 146 games over the last three seasons.

NBA | Pistons coach Brown out indefinitely after surgery

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Detroit Pistons coach Larry Brown is out indefinitely after having surgery related to a November hip operation.

Brown

When Brown can return will be determined by his doctors, Pistons spokesman Kevin Grigg said Tuesday.

Grigg wouldn't elaborate on Monday's surgery, except to say that it was successful.

The 64-year-old Brown missed six games early in the season after his hip procedure.

Assistant Gar Heard, who went 2-4 in Brown's first absence, again will run the team as long as Brown is unable to coach.

Wheeler's role just got bigger

ANTHONY MENDOZA

There is no way to replace K-State senior forward Megan Mahoney, who is out for the season with a torn Achilles tendon.

The timely baskets when the rest of the team is struggling, grabbing a key rebound and leading the break, or finding fellow senior Kendra Wecker on the block and giving her the ball where she needs it to score are all things Mahoney brought to the floor that will now be missed.

Mahoney played as the point guard for a majority of the season and often matched up with quicker guards who hounded her once the ball crossed half-court.

She dealt with the pressure, and now it's time the Wildcats deal with the loss of the glue of their team as they enter the NCAA Tournament, where an early round loss puts a damper on an entire season.

One player cannot be asked to replace Mahoney. It would be unfair, because no one on the team aside from Wecker can do the things Mahoney brings to the court on a consistent basis.

However, there is a player that can make a difference in a way that Mahoney can't, and that's in the post.

That player is freshman center Shana Wheeler.

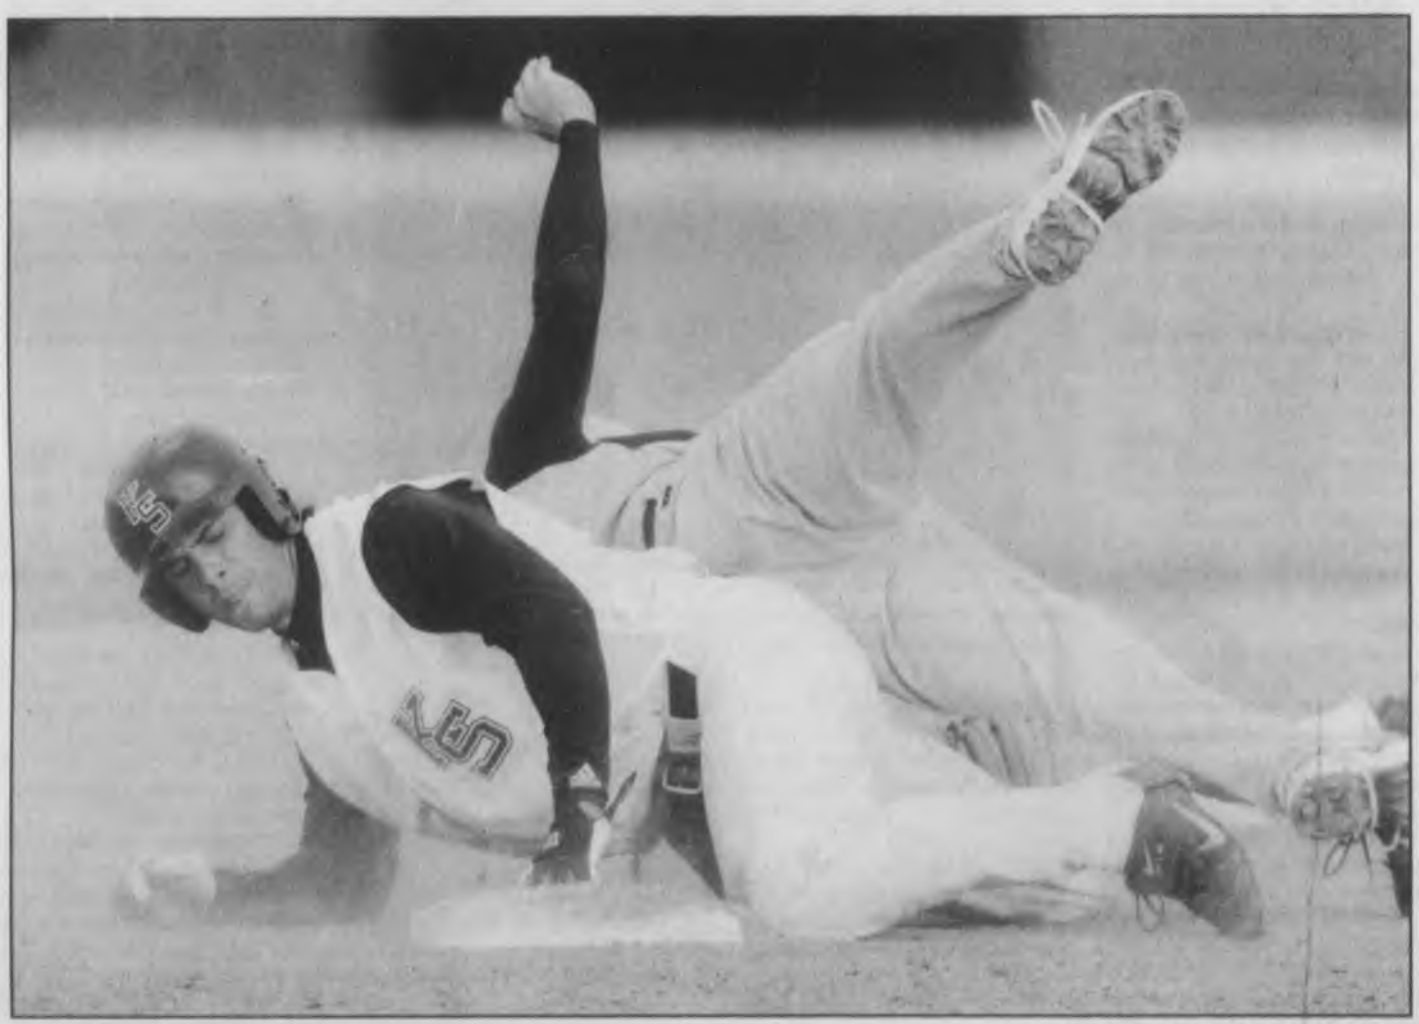
Since the start of the Big 12 Tournament, Wheeler has looked lost. She has played like a freshman.

In three games, Wheeler had more turnovers (7) than she did points (6) or rebounds (4).

Wheeler was dominated by post players Tiffany Jackson from Texas and Sophia Young of Baylor, and in those two games, she only played a total of 10 minutes.

Wheeler may become a scoring threat down low in the post eventually, but that's what the Wildcats need from her now as they open up tournament play on Saturday in Seattle against Bowling Green.

The Wildcats need Wheeler to be the consistent defender that she was during Big 12 regular season play – altering shots down low with her long arms and jumping ability, coming off help-side to prevent teams from getting easy layups and forcing opponents to settle for the outside shot.



That is what Wheeler was when K-State was rolling through teams. Now they're getting by on grit and small spurts of brilliance.

If the Wildcats have any hopes of getting through the second round and into the Kansas City regional, where anything is possible with a "home crowd" behind them, Wheeler will need to step up and be the intimidator, not the one backing away.

Wildcats sweep NDSU with 11-5 win

Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In its final game before beginning Big 12 Conference play, the K-State baseball team completed the two-game sweep of North Dakota State with an 11-5 victory on Tuesday.

Junior Steve Murphy went 4-for-4, scored 3 runs and drove in one run to help the Wildcats (12-5) move past the Bison (0-12-1) and extend K-State's winning streak to eight games.

Junior Brett Ames picked up his first win in his collegiate debut, as he pitched 4.0 innings, gave up three runs on three hits and struck out five.

Ames was relieved by freshman Brad Hutt (3.0 innings), B.J. Kissel (1.0 inning) and Eric Rollins (1.0 inning). North Dakota State's Jay Mitchell picked up the loss after lasting five innings and giving up four runs on six hits.

K-State fell behind 2-0 in the second inning after the Bison's Reid Arnold drove in two runs with a double. K-State responded in the bottom of the inning to tie the game at 2-2.

The Wildcats took their first lead of the game at 3-2 on a Terry Blunt solo home run in the third inning. Blunt went 1-for-4 on the day, extending his hitting streak to 10 games.

North Dakota State tied the game in the fourth, and then K-State pulled away with one run in the bottom of the inning and two runs in each of the fifth, sixth and eighth innings.

The highlight of the sixth inning was a two-run home run by senior Josh Dent, his second homer of the season.

On Monday, the Wildcats' offense was potent, as K-State pounded the Bison 25-1. Nine Wildcats collected two or more hits, and K-State tied a school record with 26 hits.

K-State begins league play this weekend, as the Wildcats travel to Stillwater, Okla., for a three-game series with Oklahoma State. First pitch is set for 7 p.m. on Friday at Allie P. Reynolds Stadium.

Third baseman Barrett Rice pulls in a pop-fly during the fifth inning Tuesday at Tointon Family Stadium.

K-State takes 4th at Hackler Invitational

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State men's golf team started strong but could not follow through at the Jim Hackler Invitational in Myrtle Beach, S.C.

With a combined first round of 295 to begin Sunday, the Wildcats catapulted in front of 11 teams to sit in first place.

After two more rounds, however, the Cats could not hold on, capturing fourth place Monday with a total score of 900.

"We led after the first round, which was a great experience," head coach Tim Norris said. "Fourth was a slight disappointment, but we stepped it up a little bit, and now we need to step it up a little bit more."

After K-State's impressive first round, the team kept its momentum, carding a 296 in the second round, landing K-State in third place behind first-place Coastal Carolina and second-place Purdue.

Senior Matt Van Cleave paced K-State on Sunday in fourth place, shooting rounds of 77 and 67. Van Cleave's round of 67 was the tournament low, as well as his individual low for the season.

"I wasn't very comfortable in the beginning first round," Van Cleave said. "I started shooting well late in the first round and that carried over into the second round."

Senior Nick Schumacher trailed closely behind Van Cleave in 10th place, with rounds of 72 and 75.

"Matt had another great tournament, and Nick had a solid performance, as well," Norris said. "We just didn't

Shaping up for Spring Break

Weight loss program must incorporate exercise, nutrition

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Almost everyone has fantasies of going to the beach during spring break and not being embarrassed to remove their shirt. Men want a rock-hard chest and abs, while women look for flat stomachs and tight butts to show off in their new bikinis.

However, varying body sizes and types dictate that these lofty standards are unattainable by all. There is no need to feel inferior; many things can be done to ensure that one is in the best physical condition possible.

"Eating healthy and exercising are very important," Ashleigh Rogers, junior in dietetics and gerontology, said. "They go hand-in-hand when you want to get in shape."

When one is trying to lose weight, it is important to examine what is eaten during the day. It is vital to eat a healthy breakfast, such as juice, toast and a piece of fruit. This will prevent binge-eating and curb the amount that is eaten throughout the day, Rogers said.

During the day, it is imperative to eat balanced meals with moderate portions and low-fat meats such as chicken and poultry.

"It is best to avoid fried foods, which are high in fat," Rogers said. "Baked foods and meats are much more healthy.

"Fresh fruits and vegetables are a good alternative to carbs for people who are concerned with that. It is important to eat fruits and vegetables anyway, since they contain important vitamins and nutrients that are only found in fruits and vegetables."

Portion size is also important to consider when planning meals. One portion of meat is about the size of a deck of cards. A serving of raw vegetables is one cup, while a serving of cooked vegetables is one-half cup. Cereals and pastas also have a serving size of one-half cup or about the size of a small apple, Rogers said.

Having healthy snacks throughout the day is also an integral part of good nutrition. Eating a piece of fresh fruit is an excellent snack idea.

"Avoid snack crackers and granola bars because they are high in fat," Rogers said. "Saltines with peanut butter are a good alternative."

When thinking about the amount of calories to consume in a day, a healthy number is about 2,200 for men and 2,000 for women. Dropping down to 1,800 calories is a workable calorie amount if one wants to lose weight, Rogers said.

She also recommends that one doesn't get hung up on how many calories are in food.

"It is all about content, not calories," Rogers said.

She also said that eating less does not guarantee weight loss.

"It is extremely important to exercise when putting together a weight loss program," she said.

With exercise, it is essential that students start out slow and don't push themselves too hard in order to avoid injury and soreness, Larry Simonson, fitness consultant at the Wellness Center, said.

"It is important to pick something you enjoy doing because you are more apt to get up and do it on a regular basis," Simonson said.

Thirty minutes, three days a week of cardiovascular exercises such as running, walking or swimming is a good starting point. It is also important to incorporate a weightlifting regime for 45 minutes, twice a week, Simonson said.

When lifting weights, it is best to begin with machine weights. This allows the person to learn the proper technique and build enough strength to control free weights without improper technique or injury, he said.

The Wellness Center is located in the Peters Recreation Complex. Fitness consultants are on-hand to help students with consultation and

Spring Break provides last chance to bond with friends

ASK THE 5th YEAR

ADAM AKIN

Q: I'm trying to talk a friend of mine into coming on spring break with the guys, but he says that he has to spend it with his girlfriend. How can I talk him into coming?

A: This question really hits home with me. I've recently been in the exact situation. What people need to understand is that spring break is not just a time to go crazy and party your brains out. It is also a time to bond with your friends and make lasting memories that will be cherished until the day you die. This is especially true if you are going with a group of very close friends that you have known for a long time. This is the case for me. And this being our senior year, it is even more important to spend quality time with the friends we have now.

We will soon be parting ways and will regret not taking every advantage of the moments we have in college. The amount of freedom we have in college cannot be found anywhere else in life. We not only have the freedom to do what we want, but also the freedom to say and think what we want. It would be a miracle if we had another chance in life to gather so many close friends in the same place with the freedom to do whatever we want for an entire week. I guarantee that in the future we would give anything to have this opportunity again.

The reason that guys want to go on spring break without any girlfriends is not because we want to cheat on our girlfriends (well, for some I guess it is).

The reason is that when you fill a house or condo with all guys, we have the freedom to say and think anything we want. This is the only way that we can really bond. Some of you may be asking why it isn't as important to bond with your girlfriend in the same way.

Well, the answer is simple.

If you really care about your girlfriend, you will stay with her after graduation. But it is almost certain that most of your friends will be separated. We can't let these precious day slip past us.

OK. Let me now wipe away my tears so that I can help you save your friend who is getting completely owned by his girlfriend.

Try to explain to your friend how important it is to you and everyone else going on the trip that he comes along. Also, it is important for him (and everyone else reading this) to understand that guys hate seeing their friends get punked. It is difficult for guys to witness a close friend get bossed around by his significant other. We think of our friends so highly that we hate seeing them fall victim to some outside power. We want them to stand tall and proud, not wilt and sulk away like a puppy that has just been slapped with a sandal.

Now your friend may say that it is his choice and that he is not getting bossed around. But don't listen to that B.S. That is just his desperate attempt to save face.

Make it clear to your friend that spending the last few days that you guys have together as a tight-knit group of friends is more important than chasing after the first long-haired temptress that comes by.

If he still refuses, screw him. If he doesn't want to be there for his friends, you don't want him there.

Note to readers: Sorry this column wasn't that funny. But I really needed to rant and rave about this. I promise that my next column will be funnier.

Adam Akin is a fifth-year senior in business. If you have a burning question, you can e-mail him at edge@spub.ksu.edu.

'American Idol' Moves on Without Mario

The show must go on, even without Mario Vazquez, "American Idol" producers said Tuesday.
Vazquez, among the 12 finalists picked by viewers, withdrew for undisclosed personal reasons and was replaced by Nikko Smith, son of Hall of Fame baseball player Ozzie Smith.

Executive producers Nigel Lythgoe and Ken Warwick said Vazquez explained his decision to them, but they told a news conference they intended to respect the singer's request for privacy.

Fox's hit talent contest, drawing close to 30 million viewers an episode in its fourth season, will weather the latest storm, Warwick said.

Bets With Bookie May Reveal 'Race' Winners

Online wagerers: We're sorry to tell you, you've been eliminated. Offshore bookie Sportsbook.com suspended betting on the winner of the seventh edition of "The Amazing Race" last week, citing unusual betting patterns on one team from accounts originating from California and Massachusetts over a 12-hour period.

"We saw a disproportionate amount of wagering coming in on them," Sportsbook.com marketing director Alex Czajkowski told The Associated Press. "They were betting at the limits a first-time customer can bet at."

Although this is a first for both "The Amazing Race" and Sportsbook.com, this isn't the first reality TV show spoiled by online wagers. Betting was suspended for the Amazon and Pearl Island "Survivors," the second "Bachelor" and the second "Apprentice" after heavy — and accurate — wagers on the winners.

Lil' Kim Case Goes to Jury

Lil' Kim

Did Lil' Kim's big head leave her believing she was above the law?

Such were the charges leveled by prosecutors during closing arguments at the rapper's perjury trial Monday.

"Maybe she believed she was a Queen Bee, above the law, that for a multifaceted superstar, the rules were different for her," said Manhattan Assistant U.S. Attorney Cathy Seibel.

The rapper's defense attorney, Mel Sachs, disagreed, calling the prosecution's case "asinine."

Now the diminutive rapper's fate lies in the hands of a jury of her peers.

THE BOARD of Directors of Student Publications Inc., and the A. Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications at Kansas State University jointly seek applicants for a 12-month, non tenure-track position. The person hired will serve as news adviser to the award-winning campus daily newspaper, the Collegian and the electronic Collegian and teach two classes per semester in the Miller School. The successful applicant will begin June 1, 2005, and will report to the director of the Miller School and to the director of Student Publications Inc. A bachelors degree and professional experience in print media is required. Master's degree and/ or previous experience advising student publications is preferred. Applicants should have demonstrated a commitment to students' rights and responsibilities under the First Amendment and have a strong adherence to journalistic standards as outlined by the Society of Professional Journalist Code of Ethics. Competitive salary is based upon qualifications and experience. Kansas State University and Student Publications Inc., are equal opportunity employers. Review of applications will begin April 1, 2005. Candidates are asked to send a letter of application, contact information for three references and vita or resume to: Selection Committee A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications Kansas State University 105 Kedzie Hall Manhattan, KS 66506-1501. Additional materials including a statement of teaching and publications advising philosophy are welcomed. Please send electronic submissions and inquiries to Pat Hudgins at phudgin@ksu.edu. The Collegian; Student Publications Inc. students have been producing the Collegian for K-State students since 1896. With a press run of 11,000 each weekday morning of fall and spring semesters, the paper is one of the state's largest morning dailies. Funding comes from Student Activity fees and from the student advertising staff that sells more than $500,000 in display advertising each year. The summer Collegian is published Wednesdays in June and July. The Collegian is one of the nation's most honored college newspapers. In Spring 2003 and 2004 the Collegian received a Gold Crown award from the Columbia Scholastic Press Association and in 2002 and 2004 won the Apple Award for best of show at the convention from the College Media Advisers. The Collegian is a frequent recipient of the Pacemaker Award from the College Media Advisers. For more information go to http://www.spub.ksu.edu. Student Publications: Student Publications Inc. is an independent, $1.3 million corporation that publishes the Kansas State Collegian newspaper, the Royal Purple yearbook and the K-State Phone Book. With more than 150 students on its payroll, Student Publications Inc. is one of the university's largest student employers. Five full time staff members assist the director in supporting the student staffs. The School: The K-State journalism and mass communications program is one of the oldest in the nation dating back to 1910. The Miller School has four sequences— advertising, electronic media, journalism (including electronic news), and public relations. The undergraduate program has been rated among the 20 best in the country. The Miller School, which is privately endowed, is the largest academic unit within the College of Arts and Sciences and the largest major on campus with an undergraduate enrollment of about 660. The graduate program offers a M.S. in Mass Communications with an enrollment of 30 students. The Miller School is fully accredited by ACEJMC. The University: Kansas State University, a comprehensive public education and research institution, was founded in 1863 and is one of the first three land grant institutions. It is located in Manhattan, KS, about 120 miles west of Kansas City. The Manhattan campus serves about 21,000 students. Kansas State University ranks first nationally among state universities in its number of Rhodes, Marshall, Truman, Goldwater and Udall scholars. 48 HOURS | Students differ on attention given to professor's trial

She said she enjoyed his class, and never imagined her professor to be capable of such a gruesome crime.

Garber was enrolled in one of Murray's classes at the time of his arrest. He described Murray as being passionate about his job, but said he often appeared preoccupied in the weeks leading up to his arrest.

The "48 Hours" staff declined to comment about the segment, as it is still in production.

The program is expected to air in May.

Other K-State students have mixed feelings about the flood of media attention the trial has received.

Jen Mayekawa, freshman in nutrition and exercise, said she is satisfied with the media's coverage.

"I'm happy that they're showing both sides of the story," she said.

Other students said the trial is receiving a disproportionate amount of attention from the media.

"There's been too much emphasis on this trial," Jake Lohrmeyer, sophomore in political science, said. "Everybody is fixated on this case when there are hundreds of murders that are not reported like this one has been. Those people aren't any less important than the victim in this case."

Closing statements in the trial were presented Monday after four weeks of testimony. Jury deliberation began Monday, and no verdict was reached Tuesday.

prayed about not being attached to the outcome," he said.

Prosecutors say Ross was bludgeoned and stabbed on Nov. 13, 2003. Her body was found the next day in the living room of her rural home north of Lawrence.

They argued the English professor killed his wife partly because he was furious he could lose his daughter, who was 4 at the time, in a custody battle. Ross had planned to move to California, where Lima lived.

Defense attorneys countered that Murray, who lived in Manhattan, was a peaceful, calm man saddened by the end of his 18-year marriage. They also said there was no blood, hair or fiber evidence or fingerprints linking Murray to the crime. They suggested Ross was killed by at least two unidentified people.

After the divorce, Murray and Ross shared custody of their daughter and were mediating custody issues at the time of her death. The defense argued Murray had received encouraging news from the attorney handling his child-custody dispute.

Prosecutors said Murray conducted Internet searches on how to commit murder and dismissed defense arguments that Murray searched the Internet because he was conducting research about writing television crime dramas. They said he was considering moving to California.

Also, prosecutors said Murray first said he was home grading papers when Ross was killed and then said he had been driving on Interstate 70 to Paxico, which is between Manhattan and Lawrence, but turned around on his way.

Defense attorneys said Murray didn't have enough time to make the round trip and be home when the baby sitter brought his daughter home. Prosecutors said he did.

Murray and Ross began their relationship in Ohio, where she enrolled in one of his classes. Murray has been suspended with pay from his job at K-State, where his former wife was once the director of employee relations. She later worked as an attorney and conflict mediator.

have the support we needed from the other three guys."

On Monday, the Wildcats struggled, firing a 309 – the team's highest round of the tournament.

K-State, however, was not alone, as seven of the 12 teams in the field carded its highest round.

Van Cleave nonetheless, maintained his spot at fourth, shooting a final round of 74. This is Van Cleave's fourth consecutive top-10 finish.

Schumacher fired his highest round of the tournament Monday as well, with a round of 78.

Schumacher finished with a tie for 14th, marking his third consecutive top-20 finish.

Junior Tyler Cummins shot three rounds of 77, landing in a tie for 34th.

Junior Ben Kern fired rounds of 73-78-82, finishing in a tie for 39th. Freshman Kyle Yonke tied for 44th, carding rounds of 73-80-80.

Kern said while it was a good tournament overall for the team, his individual game was lacking.

"It was a great tournament for the team, with a lot of good teams there," Kern said. "My game just wasn't there. I had trouble keeping the ball in play – I got pretty careless."

Regardless, every tournament is a learning experience, Norris said.

"It was another good golf course to help prepare for the rest of the spring," Norris said. "Hopefully, we're a little more improved in our outing in California."

The Wildcats resume competition during Spring Break on Mar. 21-22 at the Stevinson Ranch Invitational in Stevinson Ranch, Calif.

motivation to begin an exercise program properly. Nutrition counseling is also available to help people learn how to plan meals and buy the most nutritious food available, Simonson said.

"The Rec Complex will see the biggest surges of people right after Christmas break until right before spring break," Simonson said. "That is when we are our busiest."

Kelly Maze, sophomore in pre-nursing, sees the positive effects of a good wellness program.

Maze tries to work out at least three times a week, integrating weight lifting at the Rec Complex and doing some form of cardiovascular workout.

"My favorite thing to do is to run when it is nice outside; I don't have any set path because I like to keep a variety in my running," Maze said. "I do stairs and run the track at Old Stadium. I'll also do my crunches and sit-ups in the grass if it's not wet."

Maze said she tries not to eat at night because it can become a bad habit. She also tries to limit her portion sizes and include all kinds of foods in her diet. She said she realizes that if one begins working out for spring break right now, there won't be enough time to get the results desired.

"You won't get that perfect body in a few weeks, a month or even two months. You have to have a year-round workout plan or those few pounds you lose right before spring break will come back," she said.

Maze said that a daily routine is beneficial to all.

"Even if you can only work out a half-hour a day, it is good to get your blood pumping. You feel good about yourself and you will feel good for the rest of the day."

nomena.

Furthermore, only 25 percent of tornadoes are actually classified as "significant," with only three tornadoes in Riley County reaching that severity level since 1950.

"You could live three or four lifetimes without having a tornado hit your home," Jones said.

Flooding is actually the number one cause of death during severe weather. Just 50 centimeters can wash a vehicle off the road. In many situations, the road itself has been washed away, Jones said.

Jones is working not only to educate, but also to equip residents in Kansas with the proper tools needed to stay safe by working to bring siren systems to smaller communities as well as endorsing the weather radio.

"We're discouraged because only 10 percent of the population owns these weather radios," Jones said. "We'd like to see them as wide-spread as smoke detectors."

These radios offer a specialized warning system. It can be programmed to recognize a specific county so whenever the National Weather Service issues a watch or a warning for that county, the radio automatically goes off, alerting residents to potentially dangerous weather conditions, Jones said.

The radio plugs into the wall like any other appliance, but has a back-up energy supply if the electricity goes out. Jones said that a problem with most siren systems is that once the energy supply has been cut, the siren can't function.

He is working in conjunction with Dillons to offer consumers weather radios for $29.95, less than half of the list price.

Laurie Harrison from Riley County Emergency Management discussed various local alerts of severe weather activity. Cox Cable provides a break in programming if severe weather is possible. They also offer pager notification for all weather conditions.

The greatest preparation is to have emergency supplies in order and a severe weather plan prepared, Harrison said.

Life without Mahoney

Megan Mahoney drives to the basket around Baylor's Steffanie Blackmon during Saturday's game in Kansas City, Mo. Mahoney finished with a team high 17 points in the Wildcats 68-55 loss to the No. 1 Seed Baylor Bears. She was named to the first team all-tournament team along with teammate Kendra Wecker.

K-State prepares for tournament without starting forward

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As she lay motionless on the court at Municipal Auditorium in Kansas City, Mo., all K-State senior forward Megan Mahoney could do was wait as a trainer and head coach Deb Patterson came to her aid.

Mahoney had been trying to grab a rebound after she missed a free throw during K-State's Big 12 Tournament Championship game against Baylor, when it all came crashing down in an instant.

Key stats

- Before her injury against Baylor on Saturday, Mahoney had 17 points, three rebounds and five assists.
- Mahoney is out with a torn Achilles tendon.
- Mahoney is K-State's all-time leader in assists with 589.
- With 803 career rebounds, Mahoney is 4th on K-State's all-time career list.
- Mahoney is one of two K-State women to record a triple-double, as she tallied 12 points, 12 assists and 10 rebounds against St. Louis last year.

"It felt like somebody kicked me really hard in the Achilles and the back of the calf. It was instant pain, and then I just felt it go limp," Mahoney said.

With tears in her eyes, Mahoney was helped off the court, unable to put any weight on what appeared to be an injury to her left ankle.

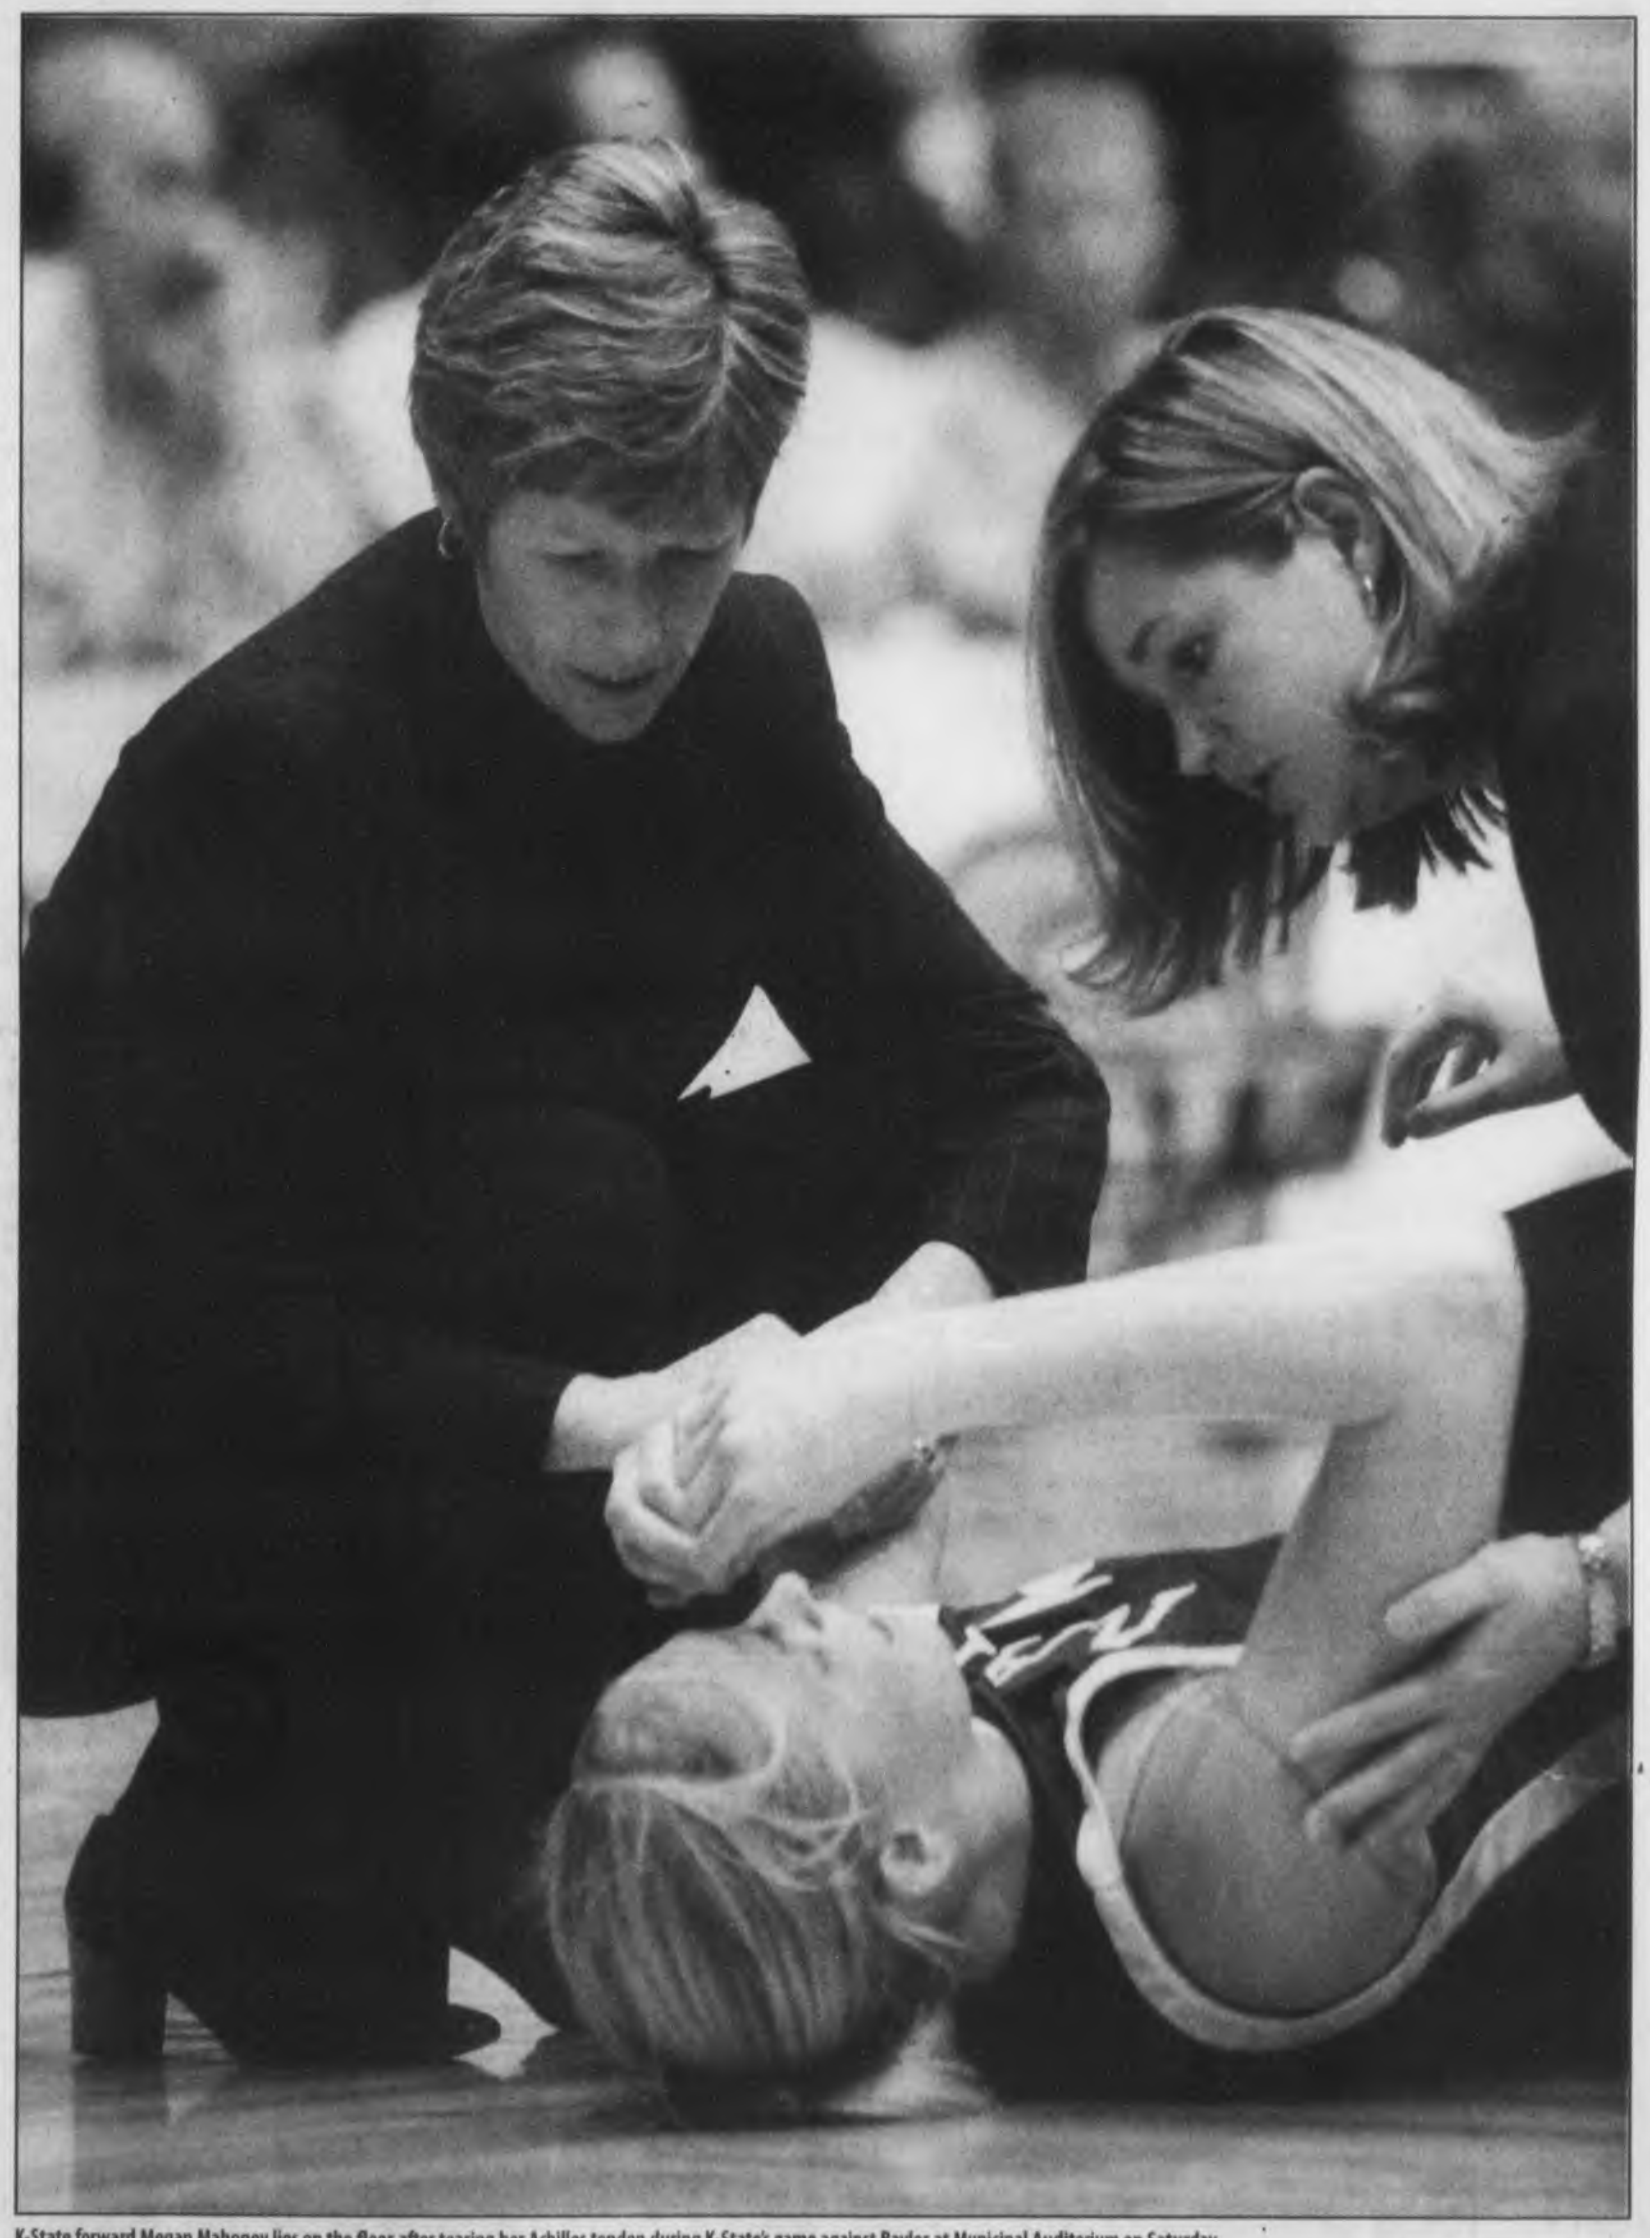
Mahoney didn't find out exactly what had happened until Sunday morning, when she was told she had suffered a torn Achilles tendon in her left foot, effectively ending her collegiate career.

"I had a good idea that that's what it was, because I couldn't really pull my toes up," Mahoney said.

Now, Mahoney has a long road ahead of her, one filled with months rehabilitation and recovery.

"Right now, I'm just going to take it day by day, and put my faith in our trainer and the doctors, and put my faith in them that they know what they're doing and that they're going to take care of it," she said. "I just need to stay positive and know that it will probably be a long process, but I just have to stick with it."

Patterson said she felt terrible for the way Mahoney's K-State career ended.



"She's just been such a tremendous contributor to the success of our program," she said. "It's really tough to watch a senior go out of their career on that kind of a note."

The rest of the Wildcats are now faced with the reality of the NCAA Tournament and trying to make a run without Mahoney, one of K-State's most versatile players.

Before she went down against Baylor, Mahoney had scored a team-high 17 points, dished out five assists and helped cut a 17-point Baylor lead to four by scoring eight points during a 13-0 Wildcat run.

Mahoney is K-State's all-time leader in assists (589), fourth all-time in rebounding (803) and 12th on K-State's career scoring list (1,307), making her absence a glaring hole in the Wildcats' armor.

Madden playing big in the middle

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After K-State's final Big 12 Conference regular season game, there was a question of whether senior Brie Madden would be with the team for the rest of the year after she found herself in sweatpants and in the stands with 8:26 remaining in the game at Missouri.

She did come back, and since then has played her best basketball since her non-conference performance against Pepperdine when she scored a career-high 18 points in 26 minutes.

In the first game of the Big 12 Tournament against Nebraska last Wednesday, Madden pulled down 10 rebounds and scored six points.

The next game was arguably the best of her career.

Matched up against first-team All-Big 12 Conference player Tiffany Jackson of Texas, Madden pulled down a team-high 10 rebounds, dished out a team-high six assists and scored 14 points in a 72-69 victory over the Longhorns.

After the come-from-behind win against Texas – the Wildcats were down 17-0 to start the game – Coach Deb Patterson said Madden has only continued to get better.

"Brie was everything we could have asked her to be in our post game," Patterson said. "The last month, she has just continued to make steady progress, and (Wednesday) I thought she was tremendous."

"She's definitely been a key player for us the last couple of games, and we're going to need that from her as we go through this tournament."

Kendra Wecker
SENIOR FORWARD

Madden started the first seven games of the season, but with the emergence of freshman Shana Wheeler, Madden has been coming off the bench, a role she said does not bother her, because she has had to play many different roles throughout her career.

"I've always felt that my role is to be put on the floor and try to keep the game going and not let it drop off any when I get in and give the team what they need any given night," Madden said. "I feel as if my role changes every game. Whatever they need from me, I try to give, and whatever Coach (Patterson) wants from me, I try to give that."

With the recent struggles of Wheeler, the senior has logged 19 minutes or more in each of the last three games, including playing all but two minutes against the Longhorns and 31 minutes of the Big 12 Tournament Championship Game against Baylor on Saturday.

Senior Kendra Wecker said Madden was a key player in the Wildcats' run to the tournament championship game, and they need the same effort if they are going to advance through the Kansas City Regional of the NCAA Tournament.

"Brie doesn't start, but over the last couple of weeks when she's come in off the bench, she's made her presence felt," Wecker said. "She's definitely been a key player for us the last couple of games, and we're going to need that from her as we go through this tournament. She's been really aggressive offensively, defensively. She played really great against Texas, I thought."

Call it a wake-up call in the final game of the regular season, but more than ever, Madden's status on the team is a role unquestioned.

K-State ready to take on Bowling Green

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As the No. 4 seed K-State Wildcats prepare to travel to Seattle to begin NCAA Tournament play, one thing sticks out in senior guard Laurie Koehn's mind – going out strong.

"There is just something about it when it's your last year, when it's your senior year, when you know it's your last time to do this, it just makes you want it just a little bit more," Koehn said. "It's going to be the last time to put a Kansas State uniform on and lace it up and go out there and compete. You're a little bit more hungry your senior year."

For Koehn and the rest of the Wildcats, their first chance to put that hunger to the test will come at 7 p.m. on Saturday against No. 13-seed Bowling Green in the first round. It will be the Wildcats' second meeting ever with the Falcons. The first meeting came on Dec. 1, 1989, when the Wildcats defeated the Falcons, 72-60.

Bowling Green is led by sophomore forward Liz Honegger, who is averaging a team-high 7.9 rebounds and 14.5 points per game. K-State head coach Deb Patterson likened Bowling Green's style of play to that of Iowa State.

"Defensively, they'll play some zone press; they'll play some zone, some man," Patterson said. "But on the offensive end, they would remind people a great deal of Iowa State.

"They're guaranteed to have three out there that can shoot the three, with the point guard just kind of looking to break you down off of on-ball screens."

The Wildcats will be shorthanded in their quest to make it past the first and second rounds, which would place them back in Kansas City, Mo., for the Sweet 16.

Senior forward Megan Mahoney ended her college career after she tore her Achilles tendon in the Wildcats' 68-55 Big 12 Tournament Championship Game loss to Baylor.

The Wildcats are not new to loss, as earlier in the season senior forward Kendra Wecker sat out three games with an injury.

Wecker said during the time she was injured, she saw signs from the rest of the team that makes her think the Wildcats will be ok in Mahoney's absence.

"Players just stepped up," Wecker said. "We're the type of team that players can, and hopefully will, step up and rise to the challenge of a great player like Megan being out of the lineup."

Records without the NIT

The K-State men's basketball team's season might have ended sooner than the Wildcats would have liked, as the team was not selected for the National Invitation Tournament.

However, several Wildcats still left their marks on the school record books, as focus now turns to the 2005-06 season.

Weiser's promptness eased suspense for students, fans

Thank you, Mr. Weiser.

Thank you for not keeping us in suspense.

Thank you for not dropping a bomb on us while we were all soused and away on spring break.

MATTHEW GIRARD

Above all else, thank you for letting us keep our Wooly.

On Tuesday, Director of Athletics Tim Weiser announced K-State men's basketball coach Jim Wooldridge would be around for another two years, ending the whirlwind of speculation that the fifth-year coach of the Wildcats might be let go for not advancing into post-season play this season.

During the past few days, after K-State lost to the University of Kansas in the quarterfinals of the Big 12 Conference tournament, fans and media alike have been on edge waiting for some sort of announcement on the future of Wooldridge and we finally have it.

This is a good move on Weiser's part for a number of reasons. First, he and the university realize Wooldridge has something good going on at K-State.

The Wildcats have a wealth of talent in sophomores Cartier Martin and Lance Harris and freshman Clent Stewart upon which to build for the future. With these three, the Wildcats can return to prominence in the conference.

If Wooldridge would have been replaced, the Wildcats would be starting back at square one and the fans would have to go through two or three (possibly more) more years of anguish. More importantly, we very well may have lost these players if their coach was fired.

Wooldridge said it best in his teleconference on Tuesday.

"The bottom line is we feel like things are getting better and we all believe in the same thing and that this is going to be a good basketball team," he said.

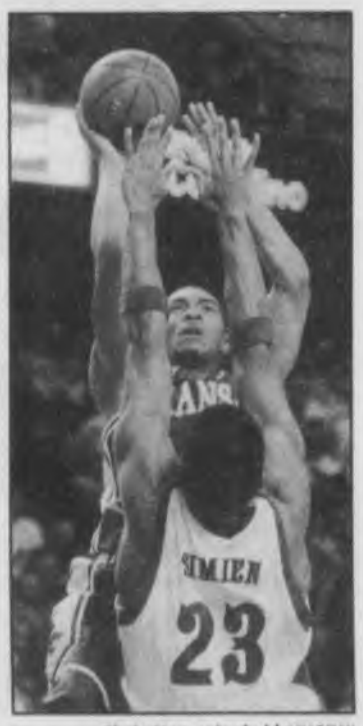
Second, Weiser didn't let this thing drag out any longer.

Had he waited to make the decision, the Wildcats could have lost recruits, regardless of who the new coach was. The easiest way to scare away possible recruits is by not having a coach.

Finally, Weiser wasn't sneaky about the situation.

Although neither he nor Wooldridge would get into specific details about the goals set for the remainder of the coach's two-year contract extension, Weiser didn't use the supposed leverage of K-State not making it to the National Invitational Tournament against Wooldridge.

Weiser also didn't take advantage of the fact that a supportive student body would be on spring break next week and wouldn't be around to raise all-holy-hell if he had decided to go another direction for the coach of the Wildcats.



But, thankfully all of the speculation is over, Wooly is staying and we get to see where he takes this program.

Younger players to continue season's progress

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State men's basketball team's season ended in a more sudden, disappointing fashion than expected Sunday night when the Wildcats found out they were not chosen to participate in the National Invitation Tournament field.

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN
Lance Harris pulls up for a jumper over the University of Kansas' Wayne Simien Friday at Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo.

But now, with the news that Coach Jim Wooldridge will return for a sixth season, focus will turn to the Wildcats' prospects for success in 2005-06.

Not only did K-State finish with its best record (17-12) since the 1998-99 squad went 20-13, but the Wildcats did it with many of their key contributors as freshmen and sophomores.

K-State ended the season winning four of its last six games, using a starting lineup of freshman point guard Clent Stewart and sophomores Lance Harris, Cartier Martin and Fred Peete to work with senior forward Jeremiah Massey.

In a season that provided much heartbreak – four losses came either in overtime or the final seconds of regulation – Harris said the team was strong-minded despite its youth.

"We've got freshmen and sophomores that aren't afraid, even if our backs are against the wall," Harris said on Friday after K-State fell to the University of Kansas, 80-67.

Harris was arguably the most impressive of the young players to finish the season, scoring double-digits in 10 of his last 11 games and averaging 15.3 points per game during that time.

"Lance has played awfully well on the offensive end and is improving every day defensively," Wooldridge said after the final game of the season. "He's playing with a lot of confidence right now. He's shooting the ball well."

Harris excelled in the Big 12 Conference Tournament, scoring 13 points and making four 3-pointers when the No. 10-seed Wildcats beat No. 7-seed Texas A&M 68-62 in the first round.

He was even better in the quarterfinals against Kansas, having a career day despite the loss. The Columbia, Mo., native had a career-high 23 points to lead the team, and knocked in seven 3-pointers, also a career high.

"Lance is going to be a great player in the upcoming years," Martin said. "He can really shoot the ball. He can penetrate, he can dish and he can dunk. He's one of the best leapers on our team. He has a lot of positives to his game."

Add Stewart, Martin and Peete into the mix, and the possibility of success could be high for this team despite the loss of second-team All-Big 12 selection Massey and fellow senior contributor forward Justin Williams.

Wooldridge made it clear that Harris was just one of many quality young players on his team.

"He's confident, he wants it, and he's another young player we have that's starting to really develop into a fine player," Wooldridge said.

Stewart became the first Wildcat freshman ever to start every game in a season.

Peete was second on the team in scoring average (13 points per game), rebounding (five a contest) and assists (109). He also led the team in minutes played and steals.

Then there was Martin, who, despite fighting nagging ankle injuries for the better part of the season, averaged 10.5 points and 4.8 rebounds per game. After moving to a starting post spot from his customary wing position, Martin was able to adapt and average 12 points in the conference tournament.

The foursome could get help from freshman guard Curtis Allen, junior guard Schyler Thomas and sophomore center Tyler Hughes, as the team hopes to attain a postseason appearance that has escaped it since the 1998-99 season.

"I remain wholly committed to continuing the progress we have made and firmly believe that we are moving in a positive direction," Wooldridge said Tuesday. "We were one of the youngest teams in the Big 12 this past season, and I think we are very excited about the future prospects for our program."

MAHONEY | Will not play in NCAA Tournament

"Megan obviously brings so many things to the floor, so many things that go unnoticed by a lot of people," senior forward Kendra Wecker said. "Every time that players go down, other players always seem to step up, and I think that's something that is really going to, hopefully, happen with our team.

"Whether it's me or whether it's a couple other players or the whole entire team stepping up and making an impact, I think we not only have to do that for ourselves, but for her as well," Wecker said.

The Wildcats will be looking to several players to help fill the void left by the injured senior. Senior Brie Madden, sophomores Claire Coggins and Twiggy McIntyre and freshman Shana Wheeler will all be called upon to pick up where Mahoney left off.

"We have the people that can come in off the bench and do that," Wecker said. "I think Twiggy, obviously her game against Texas was huge, and Brie the same thing. We need players like Shana and Claire to step up and really want to take on that role.

"You can't be scared of it. You've got to want to accept it and expect it of yourself," she said.

Coggins said she believes the entire team will respond to the loss of Mahoney and step up in her absence.

"Right now, its a time where everyone has to step up," Coggins said. "Everybody's got to step up. With or without Megan, we're really going to have to bring our 'A' game as players."

As K-State prepares to take on Bowling Green in the first round of the NCAA Tournament, all Mahoney can do is sit back and be the team's emotional leader from the sideline – a role she said she is prepared to take on.

"I don't want to bring anybody else down or have the team worried about me, because there is still a lot of basketball left to play, and I want them to be focused on that," Mahoney said. "I can just support them – just talking and coaching from the bench a little bit."

Mahoney said the reality that she is finished playing in a K-State uniform has not fully set in yet, but she is trying to stay optimistic about her future.

"I think that it probably won't sink in until game day and I can't suit up and play, and then after the season, it's going to be hard when some of my teammates are off to the (WNBA) League," she said. "That's going to be a hard thing, but like I said, I'm going to have to take it day by day and handle things as they come."

New stem cells may help Alzheimer's, cancer patients

By Maria Nilges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Three and a half years of research at K-State is now offering results that could change the way doctors treat degenerative diseases such as Parkinson's and Alzheimer's.

Research on stem cells derived from human embryos have been one of the top debates since President Bush took office. It was also an issue in the 2004 presidential election.

In an Aug. 9 speech at his Texas Ranch, Bush said research on human umbilical cords is promising, according to www.whitehouse.gov.

Three K-State professors are using umbilical cords to make better treatment possible.

Deryl Troyer and Mark Weiss, professors of anatomy and physiology, along with Duane Davis, professor of animal science and industry, have made discoveries that may help resolve the moral and ethical issues that surround stem cell research.

For more information on stem cell research, visit www.stemcellresearch.com.

Their discovery lies in the material between the blood vessels in human umbilical cords, which were once simply discarded after birth. They found that stem cells exist there and can be used in less controversial research.

Davis said this is an important discovery because of the high number of cells present in umbilical cords and because the scientific community did not expect them to be useful.

"This discovery opens a new and exciting door because we did not know that these useful cells were present," Davis said. "It could truly be an inexhaustible source of cells. They are continuously becoming available; harvesting is not hard."

These cells can be used in regenerative medicine. They could rescue dying cells or replace destroyed ones. This would be useful to doctors in making artificial blood vessels and heart valves, as well as in heart bypass operations.

Umbilical cord stem cells have the potential to become any cells in the body, Davis said.

The reason these stem cells stir up no moral or ethical controversies is because they are obtained after the baby is born, so the issue of abortion isn't present. Therefore, the cells are categorized in adult stem cell research rather than the controversial use of human embryonic stem cells. They are also obtained non-invasively, without pain or a biopsy.

Troyer said this is one of the

The waiting continued for those in the Douglas County Courthouse as jurors in the murder trial against K-State Professor Thomas Murray deliberated for the second full day.

Murray, who is accused of killing his ex-wife Carmin Ross in her Lawrence home in November 2003, waited for the verdict in a holding cell in the basement of the Douglas County Courthouse.

Familiar faces from the courtroom included Ross' family members. They remained in the courthouse in case of a decision.

Danny Ross, Carmin's father, stood in front of the courtroom looking toward downtown Lawrence.

Carmin's mother and sisters sat outside on the side of the building with prosecutors Angela Wilson and Amy McGowan as they waited for the verdict. Larry Lima, Ross' fiancé, also waited in the halls of the courthouse.

Most of the people waiting in the courthouse were reporters and cameramen from both local and national news outlets. One described the waiting as the "verdict watch." Most had been in the courthouse for much of the day and described the day as "long."

News trucks lined 11th Street next to the courthouse as reporters prepared for their evening

Senate may cut reserve funds for rec

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Reserve funds are high for Recreational Services repair and replacement, so Student Senate may be putting a cap on it.

Michael Burns, privilege committee chair, said the reserve fund has about $114,000 in it, when $9,600 is allocated to it each year.

Burns said a cap of $100,000 will be placed on the fund and any excess will go into the committee's reserve fund.

Some funds for repair and replacement come from the operations fund.

Raydon Robel, director of Recreational Services, said most of the money used for repair and replacement comes from the operations funds.

"Because we had relatively new equipment, we weren't spending on repair and replacement," Robel said. "Now we're to the point of having some equipment."

Burns said Recreational Services will have to get its budget under $100,000 by July 2006.

Originally, $100,000 was going to be allocated, but that amount has been reduced to $90,000.

Burns said the money is for salary.

"It's the addition of one staff position, which will focus on the wellness area of the Rec Center, as well as the increase of student salaries and administrative salaries," he said.

USD #383 approves property sale, considers re-opening elementary school

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One building has been approved to be sold while the other is being considered for re-opening.

The property at 4500 West Ave., will be sold to Tillman -Partners LP for $620,000.

The USD #343 Board of Education approved the administration to proceed with the sale of the property to the company, who had the highest amount of the four other bids from three other companies.

Robert Seymour, associate superintendent for USD #383, said Tillman plans to use the property for military housing.

Roger Brannan, member of the board of education, said the majority of the money received from the sale would be placed into the special education program within the school district as well as other program-weighed funds.

Dave Colburn said if the sale takes place, there will be more flexibility with the school system's otherwise tight budget.

"At some point, I know that we have more flexibility with those dollars than I thought we did a year ago," he said. "It doesn't just go into the general fund."

Walt Pesaresi, president of the board of education, said the money will not be spent to increase the number of programs, but to maintain the programs they have.

The board also decided to wait on the decision of whether to re-open Bluemont Elementary.

The school has been closed for two

DIVERSIONS

A WASTE OF TIME — BUT HEY, IT'S BETTER THAN LECTURE

Are you ready for a break?

Illustration by Elvis Achelpohl | COLLEGIAN

1. After last week's Diversions "What are you learning?" you:
a. Took it seriously and have been trying to usurp your teacher's power by telling classmates that this week, class is optional.
b. Seriously considered becoming a voluntary teacher's aide to make things go smoothly in class.
c. Laughed and took the quiz as a joke.

2. At the beginning of the week you:
a. Punch people in the face when they tell you you have a case of the "Mondays."
b. Feel tired/hung over from the weekend's activities.
c. Are sleeping. You didn't know the university was open on Mondays.

3. At the end of the week you:
a. Complain about not getting paid overtime since you've been working for more than 40 hours the past few weeks. Who cares if it's school? You want what's coming to you.
b. Go home, crash and study for part of the weekend.
c. Laugh and are ready to party — again — this weekend.

4. How do you refer to spring break?
a. Spring what?
b. A short sabbatical.
c. I have plans that involve booze and beaches.

5. If you are still taking this quiz you are:
a. Crying because this quiz seems so real.
b. Torn as to if you should pay attention to your lecture or continue on with the quiz. (By all means, continue taking the quiz.)
c. Laughing (even if a little) because this quiz seems so real.

6. How would you like to get away for spring break?
a. Any way possible! I'll go with my parents to Aunt Selma's slideshow presentation as long as I can get out of here.
b. Eh, if I can go home, or somewhere else, I think I'd be happy.
c. I just got back from Rio, do I have to get out of Manhattan again?

7. What would happen if your teacher gave you an assignment, no matter how tiny?
a. My head will literally explode.
b. I will cry for awhile then work on it.
c. I'll take note of it and do it sometime.

8. When you talk to your parents on the phone, what do you talk about?
a. Who has time to talk to parents? I'm too busy.
b. We talk about my day, classes and when I'll be coming home next.
c. I lie to them and try to get more money from them.

9. Which phrase describes you best?
a. The horror...the horror...
b. All work and no play make Jack a dull boy.
c. What happens in Vegas, stays in Vegas.

10. If you have (or were to have) a boyfriend or girlfriend, he or she would probably think that you:
a. Were cheating on them, since you spend so much time studying — no one studies that much.
b. Are a great student. You are dedicated but you still have a fun side, aside from the occasional Grumpy-pants Syndrome.
c. Are hogging the paper by taking this quiz right now.

If you answered:

Mostly A's, seek help and relax for spring break. Who knew that someone would seriously answer A's on this quiz?

Mostly B's, enjoy your break, but you'll probably be working on homework at times, too.

Mostly C's, get to work! You've been slacking this semester, and it'll be a miracle if you come back next semester.

Important traveling tips

Planning ahead good idea for a better, safer spring break

By Amy Bolton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Michael Gerber, graduate student in accounting, went on a spring break vacation last year to Panama City Beach, Fla., he planned ahead.

"We checked out the clubs ahead of time and checked the hotels to make sure we knew where to go," Gerber said.

Gerber and his group of about 12 wished they could have flown, but to save money, they decided to drive instead.

That's a smart move, said Daniel Fung, professor of food science. Fung recommends that students who plan on taking a spring break trip consider how much money they want to spend, but also how much money they have.

When traveling to another country, it is important to have U.S. currency exchanged for local currency.

"Have some local currencies before you leave the airport," Fung said.

Fung has written reports on safe traveling, and he especially warns people to be prepared when traveling outside of the United States.

He also recommends chaining all important items, such as visas, passports and wallets, to a belt.

Travelers also should make copies of all official documents and keep them separate from the originals. Then if they are lost, there is a copy.

Fung said one of the easiest ways to lose belongings is from pick-pockets. Pick-pockets generally are not locals of the country, but rather other foreigners.

"There are many ways pick-pockets can grab you," he said.

Pick-pockters may start talking to travelers and offer to show them around the city. Fung warns that anyone who does this is not just a nice person. After a few minutes, they will tell you that you owe them money for the tour they're giving you.

To avoid getting taken advantage of, Fung recommends traveling with a group or going on an organized tour.

"The best way is to have a group of people you know," he said.

Fung also recommends staying with someone you know when you are traveling to save money.

Andrea Huckaba, freshman in math and theater, is driving to Colorado with a group of friends for spring break, but they're not staying in a hotel.

"I'm staying with a friend who goes to college there," Huckaba said.

Another important tip to remember when leaving the United States is food safety. When eating food, make sure it is hot enough that steam is coming from it. Never eat from a buffet and peel the skin off fruit.

"Don't drink the local water," Fung said. "It might have bacteria."

Instead, he recommends drinking a well-known brand of bottled water.

Fung said that if people plan ahead and prepare, they can have a fun trip no matter where they go.

Local stores offer spring break sales

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Many local businesses are offering sales for spring break.

Elizabeth Wood, owner of Atomic Age, said the store is having 15 percent off all green items.

The sale includes soaps, candles, bar ware, wallets, lunch boxes, dish towels and jewelry boxes.

The only green items excluded from the sale are place settings, Wood said.

Acme Gift has three shelves discounted 40 percent. Diane Meredith, co-owner, said the shelves are "a real mix of items."

Meredith said additional items will be added to the shelves as room is made for new inventory. Jewelry will be on sale for 30 to 40 percent off during spring break.

Jaina Lambert, manager of On the Wildside, said the store is having a 25-percent-off-winter-items sale.

The sale includes gloves, hats, scarfs and warm-wool socks, Lambert said. Tie-dyed and hemp hooded sweatshirts are also 25 percent off.

After spring break, Lambert said all winter clothing is going to be put away until next fall, so the sale is the last chance to purchase the items.

Humble Abode moved into its new location March 7. Because of the move, the store is having a "Movin' on Up" sale.

Nadine Brazda, manager, said the sale includes a mix of everything in the store.

"It is almost time to find new housing for the summer and new housing for graduating seniors, so it's a good time to save on unique accessories and furniture for the new home," Brazda said.

Zachary Mohr, senior in economics, sucks on a pair of toes Wednesday evening at the "What would you do for a hundred dollars" event at Goodnow hall. Mohr ended up winning the contest and $100.

Money incentive draws in crowd

By Jessica Holland
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Wednesday night, interested students gathered in the third-floor lobby of Goodnow Hall to discover which student would perform the craziest stunt for $100.

The event, titled "What would you do for $100?" is a competition put on for the first time by Goodnow and Moore Halls.

Aleigha Ford, Goodnow Hall president and sophomore in criminology, helped organize the program.

"It's a social program to get residents out of their rooms, and it gives them a chance to interact with each other," Ford said.

Residents from Goodnow and Moore halls were allowed to submit an application of something crazy they would do for a $100 shopping spree to Walmart, funded by Goodnow and Moore hall's budgets. If the stunt was approved by both hall housing directors, they were allowed to move on to the actual competition.

Seven students moved on, performing outrageous acts, some of which were similar to those often seen on "Fear Factor."

Matthew Vanden Boogart, a graduate student at K-State, hosted the event. He gave a warning to the audience members in advance of the graphic nature of the program.

"Some of the things you are about to see tonight will be absolutely disgusting," he said.

The audience soon agreed.

The evening's winner, Zach Mohr, senior in economics, won the $100 shopping spree to Walmart by sucking on two, unknowing-volunteers toes, one male and one female.

"It was disgusting, and I wouldn't recommend it, but it was one of the best ideas" Mohr said.

There is no doubt the competition was tough, with many creative ideas between the seven competitors.

Austin Jonas, sophomore in mechanical engineering, took second place by drinking a glass of his own urine.

Third place went to Skip Cowan, sophomore in speech, for removing previously chewed gum from the bottom of lobby chairs and chewing it.

The competing students were judged by a panel of students using five specific criteria: presentation, crowd response, originality, an awe factor and overall performance. The panel consisted of two involved students from each hall and one unbiased judge.

Despite the stunt, reactions from the students, judges and hosts were overwhelmingly positive.

Audience member Adrienne Ralston, sophomore in visual communications, enjoyed her time spent at the program.

"It was definitely crazy, and I thought there was a good variety of stunts," Ralston said. "I also really liked the emcee, he was funny and made it really exciting."

TO THE POINT

Research gives school positive reputation

Stem cell research may be the key to treating diseases such as Alzheimer's and Parkinson's, and it is happening right here at K-State.

Professors are using umbilical cords to research ways to treat the degenerative diseases. Umbilical cords were once just discarded after birth, however they may now help with a significant medical discovery.

What is even more impressing is this research is happening at our own university. If this research does find a new way to treat degenerative diseases, K-State will be able to proudly say that it was involved.

We are on the verge of a scientific breakthrough that is not only important for science, but it is important for the future of K-State as well.

While an institution is on the brink of such a discovery, its reputation could only improve. A good reputation attracts more research, funding, professors and students.

Not only does research attract people to a university, it allows students at that institution to take part in a history-making discovery.

K-State's attempt at such an important discovery will only make the university better. We will be able to compete even better with the top research institutions around the world.

Students now and in the future will benefit from the prestige the university has and will gain, and hopefully stem-cell research will be a part of it.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Our 15 minutes of fame

Spotlight shines on few positive, many negative aspects of Kansas

As the Collegian noted last Friday, Kansas has been pulling a Scott Peterson on the news coverage lately.

GRANT REICHERT

There was the GlobalFlyer media event, wherein GlobalFlyer Pilot Steve Fossett flew non-stop around the world, in the process breaking the record for "most news coverage of an event no one really cared about."

There was the capture of the BTK serial killer. This was bad publicity for Kansas, as our death penalty law wasn't reinstated until after the last BTK killing, thus preventing us from executing this monster. Still, while we won't be able to kill him, binding and torturing should still be on the table.

Kansas has also been the talk of the chattering class with the release of Thomas Frank's book, "What's the Matter with Kansas?" Frank says Kansans ignore totally awesome liberal ideas like universal healthcare, free rainbows and magical Hobbit elixirs, instead choosing stupid-head conservative ideas like tax cuts for wealthy vampires and mandatory eye-gougings.

It seems the common peons of Kansas are just too stupid to realize what's good for them. Liberal ideas are not rejected because they're bad, but rather because the bovine people of Kansas have been tricked. As a Republican, I certainly hope Democrats take this condescending, elitist message to heart.

Kansas also received press coverage for its anti-religious approach to evolution in school.

Kansans are so rabidly secular that they insist on categorizing the creation of humanity by God as mere scientific theory, open to disproval. They want to put the sublime truth of creation by God on par with pedestrian theory of evolution.

And then to rub it in, they want stickers on textbooks to make sure everyone knows that theories, such as creation by God, are certainly not facts.

Personally, this assault on religion really doesn't bother me, because as a Catholic I am firm in my faith. No matter what they say, the Pope created the world, and I'll be damned – quite literally – if a sticker is going to convince me otherwise.

Despite the transitory nature of this media coverage, Kansas is such an interesting state we shouldn't be deterred from learning more about it.

For example, did you know Kansas' number one export is its youth, followed closely by wheat and barbed-wire tattoos?

Did you know Kansas was the setting for most early cartoons? Really – just take a drive across Kansas. After about the second mile, the scenery starts repeating itself. There's the old farmhouse, the gnarled tree, the dry creek-bed, the old farmhouse...

Did you know our very own Collegian is the eighth-largest newspaper in Kansas? That's like having the eighth-biggest shadow puppet theater in Northern Siberia. Quite the backhanded honor, 'tis.

Kansas is such an interesting state, it's hard to understand why we have trouble attracting tourists. I mean, besides the crushing boredom thing. To help market itself better, Kansas recently adopted a state brand – "Kansas: As Big As You Think."

Sure, it sounds like something Napoleon Dynamite might say, but still it should've been made even more edgy and pop culture-y. Something like, "Kansas: As Flat as Your Mom." Because yo' mama jokes never go out of style, quite unlike your mother's hairdo.

Even as our Scott Peterson moment fades we should shift into Jacko media mode.

This will require a new brand. Something dynamic. Something that emphasizes our great state's achievements. Something with a lot of exclamation points.

"Kansas: Remember GlobalFlyer? That was the shiznit, huh?"

"Kansas: BTK-free since February!"

"Kansas: Where God is Just a Theory."

Or how about our state's greatest attribute: "Kansas: We're totally not Nebraska."

Concept of zero, nothingness changed the world

The USS Yorktown was a billion-dollar missile cruiser. Warships like it are designed to withstand the strike of a torpedo or the blast of a mine.

AARON DUNCAN

Though it was heavily armored against physical attacks, no ever thought to defend the Yorktown from zero.

On Sept. 21, 1997, while cruising off the coast of Virginia, zero struck, and 80,000 horsepower became worthless. The Yorktown's computers had just received new software to run its engines. Unfortunately, a single zero that was supposed to be removed from the software slipped by engineers. It lay hidden until the ship's computer system tried to divide by zero, and everything shut down.

Charles Seife relates this story in his 2000 book, "Zero: The Biography of a Dangerous Idea." He notes, "The biggest questions in science, religion, mathematics and philosophy are about nothingness."

Too often, we have not paid attention to our history and the evolution of concepts. In particular, the concept of nothing or zero has important implications for where our society has been and where it is going.

It is difficult for us to imagine it today, but there was a point in time when nothing wasn't anything at all. Dr. Robert Kaplan writes in his book, "The Nothing That Is," that zero first appeared in the Babylonian civilization around 300 BC.

The West did not respond favorably to this Eastern concept. The most important reason for the West rejecting zero is that zero broke the rules of mathematics established by Western civilization.

One of these basic rules is the axiom of Archimedes, which states that if you add a number to itself enough times, it will exceed any other number in magnitude. We see that $1 + 1 = 2$ and $1 + 1 + 1 = 3$.

However, this is not true of zero. Add zero to itself, and all you get is zero. Zero refuses to change. Because of this, the West could not accept it for nearly two millennia.

Mathematics was not the only area in which zero clashed with Western life. Zero challenged the West's belief in God. Aristotle wrote a theory to justify the existence of God. In that theory, he reasoned that there was no such thing as nothing, thus something had to have created the heavens and the Earth. Something must be moving the sun, the stars and the moon, and that something was God.

Christianity adapted Aristotle's theory to much of early Christian theology. Everything was fine until the 1500s when Renaissance thinkers rediscovered zero and realized that if nothing does exist, then Aristotle's theory is flawed at a very fundamental level. The Catholic Church was left with two choices: either accept zero and see their faith destroyed or reject it and preserve their theology.

They choose the latter and zero soon became labeled as a device of heretics, and the teaching of it was banned by the church. However, not even the Catholic Church could contain zero. Despite the Papal ban, the teaching of zero continued and eventually the West was forced to accept this most dangerous of all concepts.

Ultimately, Seife puts it best when he reminds us that, "No other number can do such damage. Computer failures like the one that struck the Yorktown are just a faint shadow of the power of zero. Cultures have ground against it, and philosophies have crumbled because of it. This why it has been feared, hated and even outlawed."

Learning from the Yorktown and from past civilizations, the zero is not a thing to be feared. It should be revered.

Lecture to discuss admissions

SAT and ACT tests to be main focus

By Matt Gorney
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The feasibility of college admissions procedures will be examined today in Little Theatre.

Professor of psychology and management Neal Schmitt will visit K-State today to deliver a presentation about standardized testing and how scores are used to admit college students.

Schmitt, chair of the department of psychology at Michigan State University, will deliver "Exploring the Feasibility of Structured Non-cognitive College Admissions Procedures" at 3:30 p.m. in Little Theatre.

Ron Downey, professor of psychology, said the non-cognitive factors Schmitt would be discussing will deal mostly with the backgrounds of people who take tests such as the SAT and ACT.

"There are significantly large differences between ethnic groups," Downey said. "These non-cognitive factors show fewer of these differences. This is very much tied to some of the concerns that existed in the University of California higher education system, where they changed their use of the SAT."

Downey said taking such non-cognitive factors into account when admitting students to a higher-learning institution would potentially eliminate much of the bias associated with college admissions.

Schmitt is prominent in his field. According to a press release, Schmitt served at the University of Manchester Institute of Science and Technology as a Fulbright Scholar.

"He is well-respected and known within the field of industrial organizational psychology," Downey said.

According to the news release, Schmitt will also discuss ways colleges and universities could use non-cognitive measurements to reach admissions goals.

The presentation is open to students, staff and faculty, as well as the general public.

"I think it can broaden the use of various screening and selection materials used for students," Downey said. "I think this is a topic that would be of interest to a large number of individuals."

Interactive technology should be used as educational supplement

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Interactive products set out to teach kids through technology.

LeapFrog's new pentop computer is an example. According to CNET News, the "pen" can translate words into different languages, help with spelling and work math problems.

Bronwyn Fees, associate professor of family studies and human services, had no prior knowledge of the computer pen, but she said she had heard of other LeapFrog products. LeapFrog Enterprises announced the launch of the product Jan. 12.

"LeapFrog products attempt to make learning interactive," Fees said. "They are fun, motor-oriented and certainly keep (kids') attention.

"While the pentop computer will provide a child with quick reinforcement in audio feedback, it should be used as a supplement to classroom learning, but not replace interaction with other individuals," she said.

Marjorie Hancock, professor of elementary education, agreed.

"The product could be a motivational tool to capture the interest of the learner, but it should never be a replacement for spelling, writing and math in their traditional sense," Hancock said.

Hancock, who also had never heard of this product, said it should be used as a "supplemental learning tool" to the traditional classroom setting.

"If children get extra practice at home, it will be a good thing," she said. "Language potential is the real strength (with the product)."

In its translating of words to other languages, the pen will help English language learners, Hancock said.

While LeapFrog's new product has much to offer, there are disadvantages as well.

"Technology cannot replace engagement with an adult," Fees said. "Interaction with another individual is how learning is best facilitated."

According to a social policy report, little research has been conducted to prove or disprove claims about interactive content on children's cognitive and social development.

The amount of research done has yet to match the number of questions about the effects.

"The producer of an educational product may self-document achievement gains in reading, writing and mathematics, but growth in intelligence quotient is rarely a measure of the effectiveness of a product," Hancock said.

Fees said parents and educators should be careful in relying on interactive products.

"The product should be used carefully, cautiously and with specific expectations," she said.

Creation, evolution expert to speak

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In the on-going debate about creationism and evolution, an expert on the subject will be talking on campus today and Friday.

Robert Pennock, who has written a philosophical book on creationism and evolution, will present a public lecture "Built on Sand: The Collapsing Creationist Tower," at 4 p.m. today in the Banquet Room at the K-State Alumni Center.

Pennock will also be giving a philosophy colloquium at 3:30 p.m. Friday in Dickens 203.

Pennock is an expert on creationism and evolution because he is a philosopher of biology, Bruce Glymour, associate professor of philosophy, said.

Pennock's book "Tower of Babel," which was published in 1999, explores the subject philosophically, Glymour said.

An edited version of the book came out in 2001, which included papers from both sides of the issue.

"He has followed the issue as a philosopher, looking at both sides," Glymour said. "It will be interesting because he's a natural speaker."

Both the lecture and the colloquium, "Models, Simulations, Instantiations and Evidence: The Case of Digital Evolution," are sponsored by the University's Center for the Understanding of Origins and the Department of Philosophy.

This is the second speaker the Center has brought on the subject of creationism and evolution.

"This is just the start of our presentations," Marcelo Sabates, associate professor and head of the philosophy department, said. "We had one last week, and we will have two or three more in the next couple of months.

"I think this one is interesting, because he is the only one that is a philosopher. The others are physicists and English teachers, people from different disciplines."

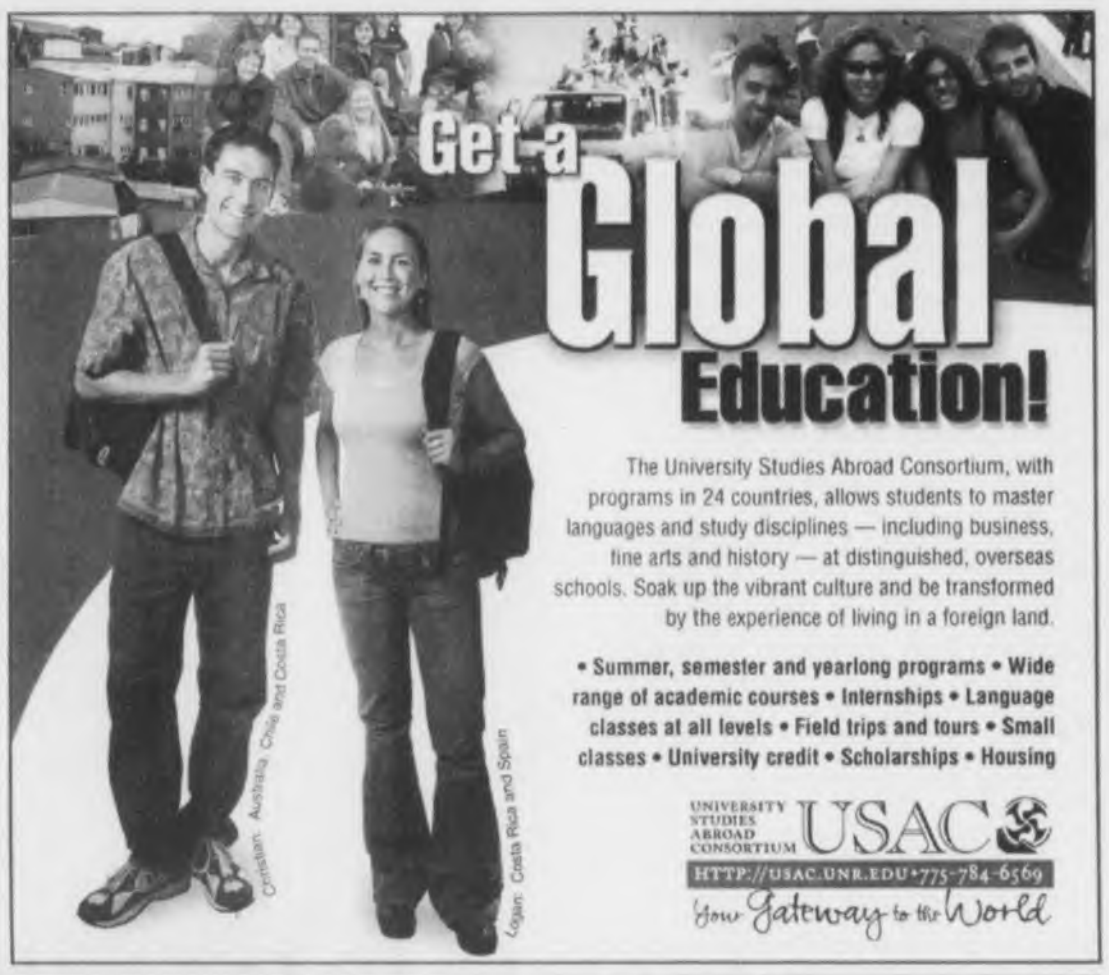
Having experts from different disciplines discuss the topics is one of the Center's goals, Sabates said.

Sabates said the lecture Thursday will be more general, and the lecture Friday will take a more scientific look.

The director of the Center, Tim Bolton, said the Center has several goals, one being to educate the public, and that is why they invited Pennock to speak.

"We're entering a very active phase this spring," Bolton said. "In the fall, we were pretty quiet, and we've been active for the past year, and now we're going to have more of public events."

Bolton said the Center started when several faculty members got together to write a proposal to the K-State provost's Targeted Excellence program.



He said evolution and creationism are important topics that are taught, but the Center is providing a undergraduate-level class next semester.

"The Center has three goals, one is to promote scholarship and research in evolutionary sciences," Bolton said. "We also feel it's a broad subject, and it's not addressed much on campus, so we want people to learn through curriculum, with the UGE class we're offering, and public lectures."

Bolton said the next event the Center will have will be April 4, a round table discussion titled "Science and Creation: Views from people of faith."

The event will be moderated by former provost James Coffman.

Fantasy draft takes time, thought

MARK POTTER

I love March for three main reasons – the arrival of beautiful weather, the excitement of March Madness and the anticipation of another season of fantasy baseball.

My roommates, past and present, would testify: I am a fantasy sports addict. I admit it. If I drank alcohol as much as I look at box scores, I would need to begin rehab.

Fortunately, I have never wasted money on my fantasy addiction because I am too cheap to pay for a team, which is why I prefer free Yahoo! leagues over pricey ESPN leagues.

This is my third season playing fantasy baseball in a free, custom league.

My friend Mitch has been my main nemesis each of the last two seasons.

My league commissioner mysteriously drew the first pick in 2003 and 2004. Since my fellow fantasy foes and I continued to hound him about his "coincidental" fortune, he chose to have the computer randomly assign this year's draft order, and, for the first time in three years of fantasy drafting, I was awarded the first pick.

In previous years, I would have taken Alex Rodriguez with little hesitation, but he no longer has shortstop eligibility, so there was no clear No. 1 player in my mind. After I pondered my options for a short while, I went with my gut and chose former Royals center-fielder Carlos Beltran.

I decided on Beltran for a couple of reasons (other than he used to play for my hometown team). Based on last season's second-half explosion, Beltran seems to have more upside than other top players, and he is less injury prone than Albert Pujols, Vladimir Guerrero or Barry Bonds.

The funniest moment of the draft occurred when my friend Sam chose career minor-leaguer and Royals backup first-baseman Calvin Pickering in round 10.

Picks like this are why Sam is always invited into our league, and why he will always finish in last place.

There are a few essentials in garnering a competitive fantasy team: reviewing the point system, researching the players, drafting smart and making necessary transactions during the season.

Different leagues offer different point systems, and it is important to know what categories your league emphasizes.

In my league, for instance, walks and singles receive equal weight for hitters, so I drafted some players who tend to draw a lot of walks. Also, pitchers in my league earn points for innings pitched and strikeouts, so I took those categories into consideration on draft day.

Researching players is also important in determining who to draft.

Look at players' numbers for the past few years so you can get a better idea how they will perform in 2005.

When you consider who to draft, try to avoid players who are more injury prone, and expect a slight decline from players who signed new contracts.

For flexibility, grab a couple guys who are eligible at multiple positions, like Aubrey Huff, Brad Wilkerson or Jose Reyes.

Also, refrain from picking a pitcher in the first round, since pitchers are less reliable than hitters, and pitchers are more dependent on their teams' success.

If you are disappointed with your draft, do not worry too much.

You can drastically improve your team by adding free agents and making smart trades.

Be hesitant in trading your top picks. The season is ridiculously long, so wait for your gamers to get hot.

One final tip: never root for your fantasy players to score points against the Royals.

EQUESTRIAN

Wildcats to compete in regionals

By Ben Fallin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State equestrian team will be hosts to the Region 2 Regional at Fox Creek Stables this Saturday and Sunday, with both the Wildcats' English and Western teams competing.

This is the first competition for K-State in two weeks, when the Wildcats competed in the SMS Western Show March 5-6. At the show, K-State tied Black Hawk College for High Point Team honors.

Head Coach Teresa Slough doesn't think the layoff will cause her team any problems.

"By this weekend, we'll have had two weeks off," Slough said. "We should be well prepared."

K-State's English team will be competing against Washington University in St. Louis, Southern Illinois, Northern Illinois, Iowa State and Illinois Wesleyan. The team is currently leading the Region 2 standings by 66 points over second-place Washington.

Senior rider Dehlia Burdan said she isn't satisfied with the lead.

"We still want to win," Burdan said, referring to the fact that the team could skip regionals and still win region 2. "Even though we're up by 66 points, winning by 88 points would be better."

The real battle to watch for this weekend won't be between two teams, but rather between Burdan and fellow K-State rider, senior Allison Woodworth.

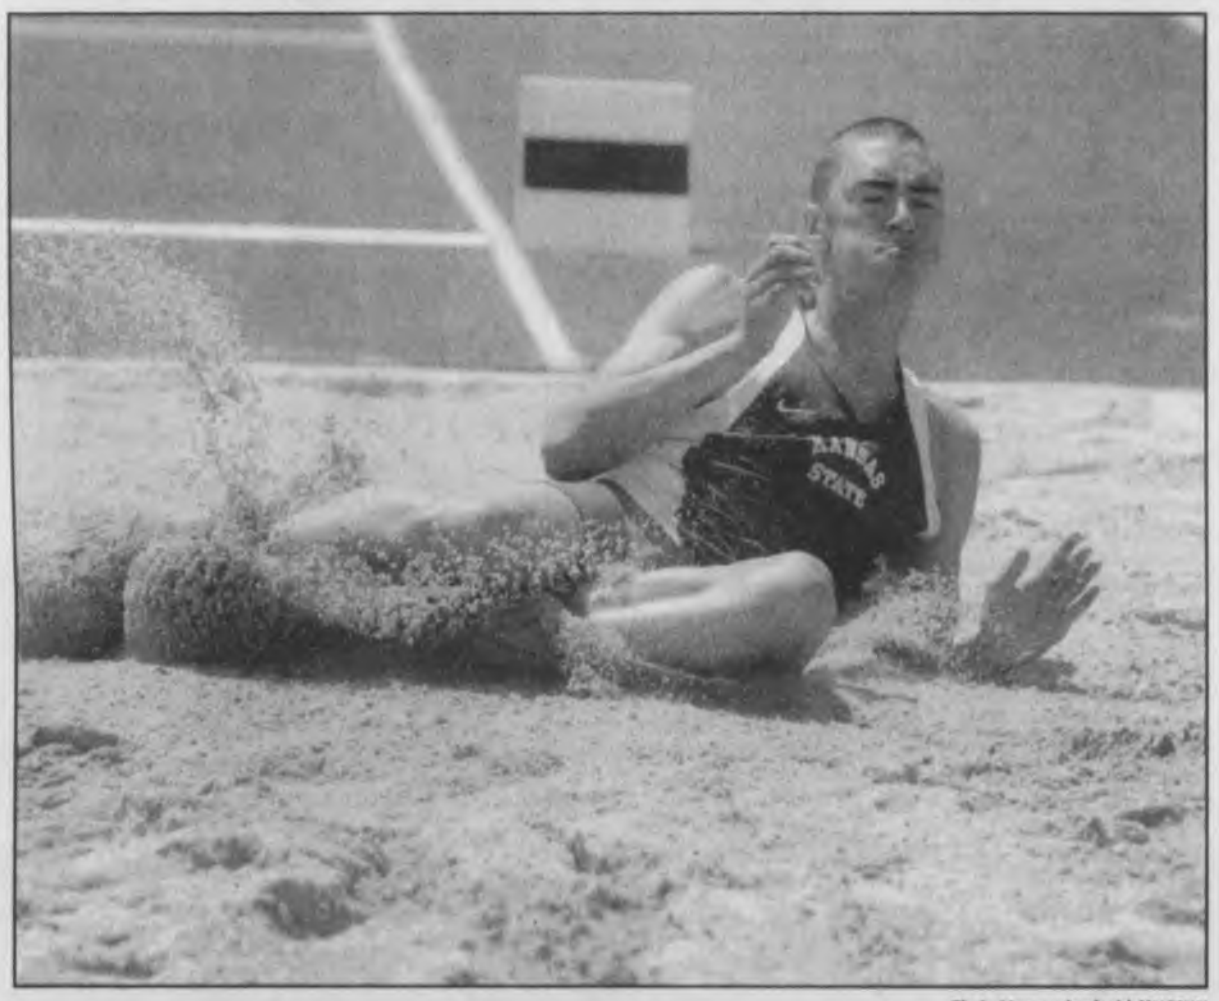
One rider from Region 2 will be sent to compete at nationals. Last year, it was Burdan, and two years ago it was Woodworth.

However, Woodworth said she is more preoccupied with winning than beating her teammates.

"It's not about individual awards," Woodworth said. "The top rider from our region will be from K-State. It's better to come in second to a teammate than anyone else."

On the other side, the Western team is locked in a tight battle with Black Hawk College for the lead in Region 2. K-State is leading by just 17 points.

This weekend, the K-State Western team will be competing against Truman State, Iowa State, Southwest Missouri State, Northwest Missouri State and Black Hawk.



The Western team also has the opportunity to represent K-State and Region 2 at nationals, and like the English team, it could come down to two K-State riders in sophomore Nicole Ruff and senior Brandi Vogel.

"We need to be immensely focused," Vogel said about this weekend. "We know our riders can beat anyone in the country, so we just need to go out there and be focused."

After the regional, K-State will compete in the Varsity Championships, April 15-16 in Santa Fe, N.M.

Limited squad to begin outdoor season at Emporia

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Five days removed from the national indoor meet, the Wildcat track and field team will compete in its first outdoor meet of the season at the Emporia State Spring Twilight today in Emporia, Kan.

The meet kicks off the second half of K-State's 100th year of track and field competition.

K-State head coach Cliff Rovelto, who is in his 13th season, said he was pleased with his team's performance during the 2005 indoor season and is ready to get the outdoor season underway.

"We had a good indoor season, and we look forward to a good outdoor season as well," Rovelto said.

Rovelto said about half his team will compete today, unless bad weather prevents some athletes from participating.

"If the weather does allow us to compete, it will be primarily kids who do a couple of events to get ready for combined event competition," he said.

"Also, we are sending a lot of the long throwers and kids that haven't had a chance to compete yet this year in certain events."

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN

The K-State track and field team will compete in its first outdoor meet of the season at the Emporia State Spring Twilight today. Lindsay Grigoriev, shown here at the 2003 Carol Robinson Pentathlon, will compete in the discus, javelin and 110-meter hurdles.

Lindsay Grigoriev, a sophomore from Laurel, Md., will compete in the discus, javelin and 110-meter hurdles.

Grigoriev, who won the K-State women's Outstanding Freshman Award in spring 2004, said she is looking forward to the outdoor season so she can showcase her main event, the discus.

"I am really anxious to get outdoors," she said.

"I am actually not a big fan of the indoor season, and that is only because my main event is discus, which is only in the outdoor season."

Though she was unable to practice throwing a discus, Grigoriev said she is in shape from her indoor training.

"It is kind of hard to prepare for discus in the indoor season, but I feel strong," she said.

"The indoor season has prepared me through weight lifting, running and progression throws.

We basically just practice the technique indoors so we do not lose anything during those couple months."

Sophomore Isaac Fakasiieiki, from Anchorage, Alaska, is another Wildcat multi-event athlete competing today.

Fakasiieiki, who will compete in the discus, long jump and 110-meter hurdles, said he hopes today's meet will prepare him for later competition.

"This meet is more for individual preparation, just to see where I am at and our other team members are at before we go to Arizona over spring break," Fakasiieiki said.

"I feel like I am kind of starting over because I did not compete very well indoors.

I am just trying to get back on my feet and make sure I am healthy."

During the 2004 outdoor campaign, four Wildcats earned All-America honors, and two hope to repeat: senior triple jumper Chaytan Hill and junior high jumper Kyle Lancaster.

K-State's men finished 31st, and the women placed 41st at the 2004 NCAA Outdoor Championships.

The Wildcats will compete in 13 outdoor meets before being the hosts of the 2005 Big 12 Outdoor Championships May 13-15.

NFL | RB Johnson signs 5-year contract in Cincinnati

CINCINNATI — The Cincinnati Bengals signed running back Rudi Johnson to a five-year contract on Wednesday, a year after he set the team's single-season record for rushing yardage.

Johnson

The contract replaces a one-year, $6.3 million deal Johnson signed on March 7 after he was designated the team's franchise player on Feb. 15. Terms of the new contract weren't disclosed. He was paid $1.8 million in 2004.

Johnson set a Bengals record last season with 1,454 yards rushing.

MLB | McGwire to attend steroids hearing

NEW YORK — Mark McGwire plans to comply with a subpoena and attend Thursday's congressional hearing into steroid use in baseball, The Associated Press has learned.

McGwire

McGwire's decision was revealed Wednesday by a representative of the former Oakland and St. Louis slugger who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Jose Canseco, McGwire's former Oakland teammate, was denied immunity by the House Government Reform committee, and his lawyer said the former AL MVP will not be able to answer questions that would incriminate him.

Canseco's lawyer, Robert Saunooke, said he was informed of the decision Wednesday by Jennifer Safavian, a lawyer for the committee.

NBA | Pacers don't expect injured O'Neal to return

INDIANAPOLIS — Pacers forward Jermaine O'Neal likely will not play again this season because of a shoulder injury he sustained nearly two weeks ago.

O'Neal

Pacers coach Rick Carlisle said that doctors are still waiting for the swelling to subside and that no decision has been made on whether the All-Star forward will need surgery.

O'Neal, who is averaging a career-high 24.8 points, was hurt March 3 when his right arm was pulled back by Denver's Francisco Elson on a drive to the basket. He has not played since, and will miss his sixth straight game when Indiana meets Utah on Wednesday night.

NBA | High court deems Stoudamire search illegal

SALEM, Ore. — A police search that turned up marijuana in Portland Trail Blazers guard Damon Stoudamire's former Lake Oswego house three years ago was illegal, a split Oregon Court of Appeals ruled Wednesday.

The decision was 5-5, upholding the original ruling that the warrantless search violated Stoudamire's constitutional rights and that the seized drug couldn't be used as evidence.

Stoudamire

Stoudamire was charged with felony possession of more than 150 grams of marijuana after Lake Oswego police responded to reports of a burglar alarm at Stoudamire's house on Feb. 23, 2002.

The front door of the house was ajar when police arrived. Officers searched the house for intruders and said they found about a pound of marijuana in an attic storage area.

CBB | 42 men's teams can't graduate 50 percent

ORLANDO, Fla. — Only 23 men's teams in the 65-team NCAA Tournament managed to graduate at least 50 percent of its student athletes while women's teams in the postseason continue to graduate at a much higher rate, according to a University of Central Florida study released Tuesday.

Two men's teams, LSU and Minnesota, failed to graduate even one basketball player.

Spring break holds endless possibilities

LACEY STORER

It's almost here; it's almost here! Spring Break, that is. At this time Friday... I will be still recovering from my St. Patty's Day hangover.

But come 10:00 Friday night, I will be cruising with my friends down to South Padre Island.

For those of us lucky enough not to have to stay in Manhattan, spring break holds the possibility of many things.

Endless partying, on the beach or in the ski lodge. Lots of crazy, quality time with our friends.

And, oh yeah – the potential for random spring break hookups.

If you're like the majority of college students, part of the allure of spring break is the possibility of getting it on with people from Maine, Ohio or whatever other universities are on break with you.

Think about it. With all the alcohol flowing, the half-naked people (at least in the warmer spring break destinations), and everyone ready to let off half a semester's worth of stress, it's a breeding ground for continuous drunken hookups.

I say go for it. Whether you've hit a rut with your love life, are enjoying the prospect of fresh meat or have just broken up with somebody, spring break is the perfect time to let loose.

It's also the perfect time to sow some wild oats, too. You only get so many chances to have the ultimate wild spring break.

Once you graduate from college and get a real job, it's no longer cool to drink yourself into a stupor for seven days straight.

Might as well live it up while you're young and able.

Now, I'm not saying you should completely whore yourself out. I actually think one of the dumbest things to do would be to have sex with a total stranger on spring break (but if you do, use protection).

But just dancing and flirting and kissing someone (or multiple people) can be enough to make you feel refreshed and revitalized.

For those couples who are going to be apart for spring break, you may want to discuss a few things before you leave.

Obviously, temptation abounds in environments like this. Better to talk about it now and perhaps even set up some ground rules before you depart to your respective destinations.

Of course, there is always the old saying: What happens in Padre/Cancun/Vegas/Breckenridge, stays in Padre/Cancun/Vegas/Breckenridge.

iPod popularity high

Hand-held music device becomes more common, diverse

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The technology society employs to listen to music has greatly changed over the decades. Vinyl records were replaced by cassette tapes, which were overtaken by compact discs, and now to compile one's entire music collection onto one of the many MP3 players available on the market. The most popular is Apple's iPod.

The iPod comes in many styles and colors. The standard iPod has 20 gigabytes of memory that can hold up to 5,000 songs. It is not cheap, costing almost $300, but it is convenient and easy to use.

"Being able to have all of my music in one place is very convenient," Carl Palmer, junior in architecture, said. "It is a lot easier than carrying around a whole collection of CDs."

Zach Snyder, junior in business management and entrepreneurship, agreed.

"I like the amount of music it can hold compared to a CD player," Snyder said. "An iPod can hold up to 20,000 songs, whereas the average CD only has 15 to 20 songs."

The iPod is operated by downloading songs onto iTunes and then uploading them onto the iPod via a connection cable.

The iPod is easy to operate. A touch-sensitive click wheel, located on the front of the iPod, allows the user to scroll the entire music library, to adjust the volume, and to play, stop or advance tracks. The iPod is cased in a durable plastic shell, and weighing just one-third of a pound, iPods are very easy to transport.

"I really like the overall design of the iPod," Palmer said. "It looks and works better than the other MP3 players; it's just really easy to use."

As with all successful products, the iPod comes in numerous styles. A version with less memory, called the iPod mini, is available in 4- to 6- gigabyte versions. The mini is also available in multiple colors.

The iPod shuffle is available in 512 megabyte or 1 gigabyte versions. The shuffle is plugged into the computer, and songs are picked at random from iTunes. The songs are then played at random, leaving the listener unaware of what will play next.

The iPod photo allows the user to store photos on the iPod. The screen also displays in full color. The iPod photo has much more memory (30 and 60 GB), but it also costs much more, with the 60 GB versions costing almost $450.

iPod users can buy numerous accessories. There are also cases that can be purchased to protect the iPod, from knit socks to leather cases. The iTrip is a connector that plugs into the iPod and transmits the music through any FM radio frequencies.

"I have the iTrip," Palmer said. "It is nice because I can take my iPod in the car and play my music while I'm driving."

Apple has created a popular industry with the iPod. Its convenience, look and capabilities are its many selling points. The general opinion among iPod users is very positive.

"I like it a lot," Snyder said. "It makes the walks to class seem shorter."

Students travel to Japan to meet professor, view architecture

By Mike Postiglione
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Six weeks ago, 14 students from the College of Architecture, Planning and Design embarked on a class trip to Japan. The students traveled across the country, spending a majority of their time in the cities of Osaka, Kyoto and Tokyo during their trip, Jan. 13-23.

The reason for this 6,400-mile journey was twofold. First, the class spent time visiting works of architecture designed by famous architects. Second, the students met with one of their studio instructors for this school year, renowned Japanese architect Hiroshi Hara.

This past fall, Hara became the first Regnier Distinguished Professor of Architecture. This program, funded by the Regnier family, grants the College of Architecture, Planning and Design the opportunity to have a prominent architect come to K-State and become a professor and mentor for the entire school year.

Traveling with the students was Robert Arens, associate professor of architecture. He helped in the development of the Japan trip, and decided to make the class' final design project a high-rise building situated in Tokyo.

"Tokyo is one of the most interesting cities in the world," Arens said. "Most tall buildings are currently being built in Asia, mainly because their societies are so open to it. So, (Japan) was a likely spot for our site."

Arens and his students trekked across Japan, visiting buildings designed by some of the biggest names in architecture, including Fumihiko Maki, Toyo Ito, Tadao Ando and Jean Nouvel.

"Things were moving at a hundred miles an hour," Dan Typaldos, senior in architecture, said. "It seems like there's just a density in all things that we're not used to here in the United States."

The students experienced many facets of Japanese society, from the subways to the dining experience of a conveyor-belt sushi bar. They even had an opportunity to stop in at one of the karaoke bars that Japan is known for.

"[The karaoke bar] is a place where you can just be yourself and not worry about what people think of you, since they can't understand your language, anyway," Brad Kingsley, senior in architecture, said.

In the end, the students found it was worth the combined 30 hours of plane travel to visit the Land of the Rising Sun.

"I walked away with a bigger desire to surprise myself with new places," Typaldos said.

Last week, Hara made one of the two visits to K-State that he has planned for this semester. He was here to assist in the design of the students' high-rise buildings and to give a presentation on one of his architectural essays.

Hara said he enjoys working with the architecture students.

"I think the students of this university are very serious about architecture," Hara said. "I like the attitude that they have."

Additional materials including a statement of teaching and publications advising philosophy are welcomed. Please send electronic submissions and inquiries to Pat Hudgins at phudgin@ksu.edu. The Collegian: Student Publications Inc. students have been producing the Collegian for K-State students since 1896. With a press run of 11,000 each weekday morning of fall and spring semesters, the paper is one of the state's largest morning dailies. Funding comes from Student Activity fees and from the student advertising staff that sells more than $500,000 in display advertising each year. The summer Collegian is published Wednesdays in June and July. The Collegian is one of the nation's most honored college newspapers. In Spring 2003 and 2004 the Collegian received a Gold Crown award from the Columbia Scholastic Press Association and in 2002 and 2004 won the Apple Award for best of show at the convention from the College Media Advisers. The Collegian is a frequent recipient of the Pacemaker Award from the College Media Advisers. For more information go to http://www.spub.ksu.edu. Student Publications: Student Publications Inc. is an independent, $1.3 million corporation that publishes the Kansas State Collegian newspaper, the Royal Purple yearbook and the K-State Phone Book. With more than 150 students on its payroll, Student Publications Inc. is one of the university's largest student employers. Five full time staff members assist the director in supporting the student staffs. The School: The K-State journalism and mass communications program is one of the oldest in the nation dating back to 1910. The Miller School has four sequences— advertising, electronic media, journalism (including electronic news), and public relations. The undergraduate program has been rated among the 20 best in the country. The Miller School, which is privately endowed, is the largest academic unit within the College of Arts and Sciences and the largest major on campus with an undergraduate enrollment of about 660. The graduate program offers a M.S. in Mass Communications with an enrollment of 30 students. The Miller School is fully accredited by ACEJMC. The University: Kansas State University, a comprehensive public education and research institution, was founded in 1863 and is one of the first three land grant institutions. It is located in Manhattan, KS, about 120 miles west of Kansas City. The Manhattan campus serves about 21,000 students. richest sources of post-natal stem cells.

"One of the most exciting things about using the discovery is that we are turning something that is normally disposed of into a valuable resource," he said.

The team is currently researching the therapeutic benefit of the stem cells on a rat that has the symptoms of Parkinson's disease. They hope the cells may be useful in improving its movement.

It has also been found that these cells may be valuable in treating cancer, Troyer said. Related cells tend to migrate to the tumors so they can deliver some specific therapy to those tumors.

Troyer said this is an important aspect that they intend to pursue.

"We will be collaborating with the Johnson Cancer Center here on campus to develop this area of our findings," he said.

Davis said only more research and time will tell the possible outcomes of their discoveries.

"What potential this has and what it could really become, we don't know for sure yet," he said. "We don't have all the answers, but what we do know is that it has been very promising so far."

The discovery was originally found in the umbilical cord of a pig when Troyer and Davis were working with the umbilical cords for another purpose. They brought their findings over to the anatomy and physiology department so that eventually human cells could be worked with.

Troyer said this discovery could establish K-State as a leader in adult stem cell research.

Rathbun holds a tray of neonatal porcine umbilical cord matrix cells.

"This gives us a platform to launch a world-class stem cell research center here at Kansas State," he said.

According to K-State Media Relations, the research is funded by the National Institutes of Health, the State of Kansas, K-State, the University of Kansas, the Johnson Cancer Center, the K-State College of Veterinary Medicine and the Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station.

MURRAY | Jurors still deciding professor's fate

newscasts. The only news that came was more waiting.

Defense attorneys visited with Murray on Wednesday afternoon in his detention cell.

"He's calm and, of course, concerned," defense attorney Pedro Irigonegaray said. "This is very tough, and he's doing well."

Still present was CBS' "48 Hours" news crew, which has been in Lawrence covering the trial since day one. Their presence is just one example of the national attention this case has brought to the state of Kansas.

While waiting in the courthouse, national reporters conversed about the BTK murder suspect and the GlobalFlyer that circled the world originating in Salina, Kan.

After two and half days of deliberation, no one can say how long the jury will take to reach the final decision.

Defense attorneys and prosecutors said they were not concerned the jury met for two full days without reaching a verdict.

"It's not surprising they are taking their time in reaching a decision in a case of this magnitude," Wilson said.

Because of the magnitude of the case and the amount of evidence available to jurors, deliberations could take up to a few weeks.

The prosecution case claims that Murray, who is on paid leave from K-State, killed Ross in a rage stemming from the custody issue of their 4-year old daughter, Ciara.

years and board members said if it were to re-open, it would most likely be for adult programs as well as child-care.

"I like the idea of considering child-care with adult programs," Seymour said.

Pam Russell, executive director of USD #383 student support, said the problem the school district faces with opening the school year-round for adult programs are occupancy codes.

"Currently it's for school," she said. "If we go with the programs for adults and the day-care, then it changes the occupancy codes. We'd have to bring it up to standard."

To make the school available for the programs, a sprinkler system and an air conditioner would have to be put in.

The school's rooms would also have to be re-sized to accommodate the adults and children.

Even so, the school is ready to be opened for elementary school, but that will not happen just yet.

The board plans to wait until at least 2007 to open the school, unless it is needed with the number of soldiers returning from Ft. Riley.

"We need to think about other issues as we prepare for Ft. Riley coming back," Russell said. "The first group of families that are arriving should be accommodated by what we have now."

The board will continue to discuss the potential re-opening of Bluemont Elementary at the next board meeting in April.

Murray convicted of murder

K-State fires professor following jury's announcement

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State linguistics professor Thomas Murray was convicted of first-degree murder on Thursday.

Murray's employment was terminated shortly after the verdict was announced.

He was charged with beating and stabbing his ex-wife, Carmin Ross, at her home in Lawrence on Nov.13, 2003.

University officials and faculty in the English department declined to comment on the verdict because of legal precautions.

Eric Carter, senior in English, was a student in Murray's "history of English language" class in fall 2002.

Carter said Murray's verdict didn't come as a shock to him.

"I kind of thought that would happen having followed the trial," Carter said. "I tried to give him the benefit of the doubt, but hearing all of the things that were leaking out, I began to question it a lot."

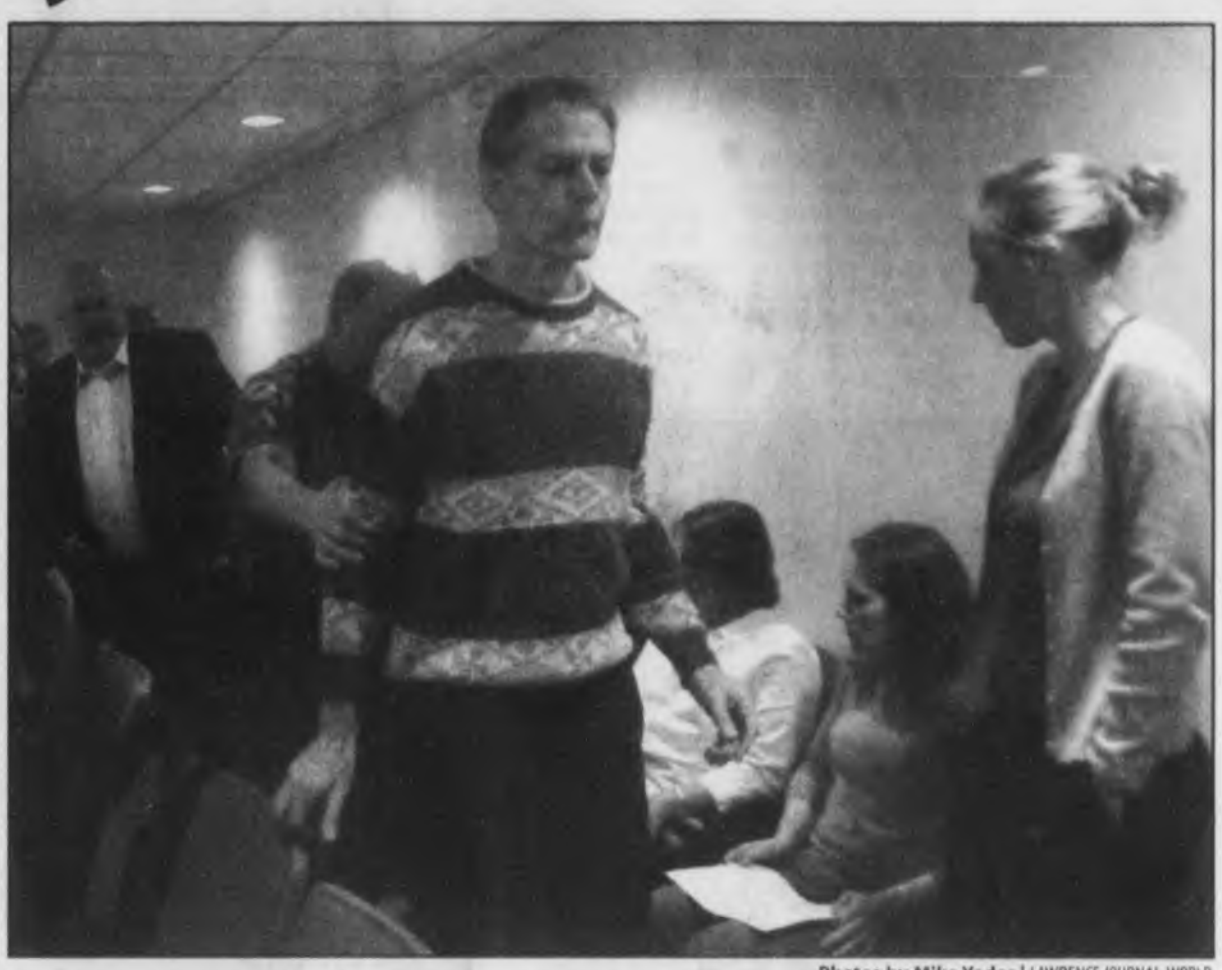
Even before Ross' murder, Carter said he had two different impressions of Murray.

"I thought he was a nice guy; he was incredibly intelligent," he said. "He always had very interesting stories and comments about our class, but at the same time, he is kind of an imposing figure. He is pretty big. I've always thought that, but I never really thought anything of it. I was pretty shocked when I had heard what had happened, but after I did, it didn't seem all that implausible."

Jessica Grant, senior in English and history, was a student in Murray's class "The development of of the English language" in fall 2003.

Despite the charges against Murray, Grant said she was shocked he was convicted.

"I really thought that because there was so much circumstantial evidence there was no way he would be convicted based on circumstantial evidence," she said.



The Rev. R. Kent Cormack of First Congregational Church where Murray, Ross and daughter Ciara attended while they were together, said throughout the trial the congregation has had the family in their thoughts.

"We have continued in our prayer and support and concern for all of the people that have been affected in these tragic events," he said.

With media outlets from all over the nation reporting on the trial, K-State has been forced into the spotlight, Grant said.

"It definitely draws attention to Kansas State, but it hasn't really been positive attention," Grant said. "I would like to think that ideally it wouldn't affect K-State's reputation, but I think that it will, and I'm not sure how."

Thomas E. Murray is led out of the Douglas County District Court in Lawrence, Kan., Thursday after being found guilty of murdering his ex-wife, Carmin D. Ross. Murray, a former K-State professor, was found guilty of first degree murder in the bludgeoning and stabbing death of Ross, 40, in November 2003 at her home in northwest Lawrence.

Jurors return guilty verdict following 3 days of deliberations

By Jesse Manning
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

LAWRENCE – Thomas Murray showed no emotion as the guilty verdict was read Thursday morning.

The K-State English professor was convicted of the first-degree murder of his ex-wife, Carmin Ross, by a Douglas County jury of 12.

Jurors did not look at the defendant as they entered the courtroom. Gasps and sobs came from members of Ross' family after the verdict was read.

Judge Robert Fairchild set Murray's sentencing for May 6 at 1:30 p.m.

Ross' family members embraced the prosecuting attorneys, thanking them for their hard work and dedication to the case.

In an emotional meeting, Danny Ross – the father of Carmin Ross – assured jurors they came to the right decision.

"The outcome is not going to bring our daughter back, but we can't thank you enough. This has given me a lot of faith in the judicial system that maybe I didn't have before," he said.

Danny Ross said he was heartened by the close attention paid to the case by the jury.

The defense will need time to evaluate the issues of the case before deciding on appeal, Murray attorney Bob Eye said.

"Sometimes trial issues are not as strong on appeal. It's too early to tell," he said.

Special prosecutor Tom Bath and assistant district attorney Angela Wilson thanked members of the jury for their involvement in the trial.

"Thank you for your hard work. I think you surprised us by coming in at 9 and having a decision by 9:30," Wilson said.

"We were pretty well decided yesterday, but we wanted to sleep on it," juror Ted Kihm said. Kihm said that the jury faced a very difficult decision, but worked well together to reach a conclusion.

"There was no single thing it came down to. It was a very tough case to decide," he said.

Kihm said Murray's

STUDENT SENATE

Senate approves $90,000 increase in Recreation Service funding

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Recreational Services is receiving a $90,000 increase in funding for fiscal years 2006, 2007 and 2008.

Student Senate approved the increase 43-3-1 Tuesday night.

The increase, which includes funding for a new wellness director position, is for operations of Recreational Services.

Of the $90,000, $44,000 will go towards the new position's salary.

The added position will be the seventh full-time job for Recreational Services. It will provide services such as personal training.

K-State is the only Big 12 school without a wellness director position.

Senator Ben Fenwick, senior in political science, said the new position will benefit students.

"There will be enough demand once the position is created," he said.

Raydon Robel, director of Recreational Services, said benefits for the position will vary.

"Depending on your interest will probably determine the impact on you," Robel said. "It's going to impact students. It's their choice for how much."

Senator Tim Weninger, sophomore in information systems, proposed an amendment to the bill by not adding the wellness director position.

Weninger said since the duties of the director are mainly taken care of by the other positions already, it would create more problems than answers. He said it would create another level of management, which isn't needed.

"One of my hesitations is this wellness director position creates middle management," he said. "This to me creates inefficiency.

Robel said funds for the position would have to come from the operations fund, because it provides a service for students.

"We don't have other sources for funding," he said. "You're our source."

The amendment failed.

Originally, $100,000 was going to be allocated, but was decreased by $10,000 between this and last meeting, due to excess funds in the Rec Services repair and replacement fund, which was another agenda item.

The repair and replacement fund has more than $100,000 in reserves, and the senate passed a motion that put a cap on the amount of money that can be in the reserve fund.

The cap was set for $100,000 and any excess will go into the Privilege Fee Committee reserve fund. The motion passed 47-0.

Privilege Fee Chair Michael Burns, senior in agricultural education, said the changes were good. Other changes include defining repair and replacement, so it is clear.

1 | RELAXING TIMES AHEAD

Whether you're staying in Manhattan drinking beer, going to South Padre for the sunny weather and hotties, skiing the slopes or sleeping in all week, it doesn't matter — it's spring break, so enjoy yourself. If your teachers told you to work on assignments over break, give them the finger and do what Frankie says: Relax.

2 | MARCH MADNESS: BALLS, BRACKETS AND BEYOND

The Big Dance has begun, and two Kansas teams are hoping to waltz through the NCAA Basketball Tournament. There are several first-round games today, but Kansas (23-6) will play Bucknell (22-9) at 8:50 p.m. in Oklahoma City. The men begin the second-round games Saturday and Sunday, with the tournament finishing up later in the week and into next weekend.

Despite the loss of Megan Mahoney, the K-State women (23-7) will play Bowling Green (23-7) at 10 p.m. Saturday in Seattle. The 16th-ranked Wildcats are making their fourth consecutive trip to the tournament. This is also the Wildcats' fourth consecutive top-five seed. Fill out your brackets and enjoy!

3 | LANDSCAPE ESCAPE

The latest exhibit at the Strecker-Nelson Gallery is "Luminous Landscapes: paintings by Kim Casebeer." Casebeer uses oils and pastels to paint her landscapes. Another artist on display is Louis Copt, who paints figurative paintings and abstracted landscape. Also on display is Stephen Johnson with other figurative paintings. The Strecker-Nelson Gallery is located at 406 1/2 Poyntz Ave. The hours are Monday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. For more information, call the Gallery at 537-2099.

4 | GO SEE THE SHEEP ON SATURDAY

K-State's Kansas Sheep Symposium and Youth Sheep Day is Saturday at Weber Hall. The symposium's producer program starts at 8 a.m. with registration. Coffee and doughnuts will be served, courtesy of Mid-States Wool Growers of South Hutchinson. At 9 a.m. the general session begins with topics about sheep and goats and how they're fed, marketed, identified and shown. The cost for Youth Sheep Day is $15 per person.

Gay marriage controversy

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A rally against the proposed gay amendment to the Kansas Constitution brought out concerned citizens Thursday evening at Wareham Opera House, 410 Poyntz Ave.

The event was sponsored by Flint Hills Parents, Families and Friends of Lesbians and Gays and Flint Hills Human Rights Project.

Ron Schlittler, national deputy executive director of PFLAG, was the keynote speaker.

"I bring you greetings from all over the country. We are at the beginning of a national movement," Schlittler said.

Schlittler said the movement against gay amendments was started by real people living real lives who were not being respected, not by activist judges.

Tammi Hawk, president of Flint Hills PFLAG, said it's a common misconception that activist judges began the movement.

"It really started in people's homes and communities in experiencing discrimination and violence," Hawk said.

To block the amendment proposal, Schlitter said it will take community organization and having the opportunity to tell others about real people's lives.

"It's about rights being taken away from a minority by a majority that isn't informed," he said.

Win or lose, Schlittler said there are two things that the proposed amendment has done.

"Using grassroots organizations, you are embracing this awful thing and using it to your advantage," Schlittler said. "It's out on the table now. The issue is 'what is the net good or harm for society?'" he said.

Following Schlitter's speech, a panel addressed different angles of the proposed amendment and answered audience questions.

John Fliter, associate professor of political science, said he believes in the inherent dignity of all people regardless of their sexual orientation.

"We have to do a lot of work in communities to change the hearts and minds of people regarding this issue," he said.

Michael Oldfather, associate professor of economics, said discrimination is costly to the economy.

"Those who face discrimination are limited to things they can do in the economy, especially in the labor market. They are forced to work where they are overqualified and underutilized," he said.

Rally supports proposed amendment

By Matt Gorney
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Proponents of an amendment to the State of Kansas Constitution defining marriage as an institution between a man and a woman gathered at McCain Auditorium Thursday night.

The Flint Hills chapter of One Voice sponsored the event titled, "A Celebration of Marriage."

Mike Farmer, director of the Kansas Council of Catholic Bishops, said arguments against the amendment based on discrimination were biased.

"Laws differentiate; they draw distinctions," Farmer said. "Since Kansas protects marriage, that means not everyone can be married."

After Farmer finished, the Rev. Cecil Washington from New Beginning Baptist Church of Topeka spoke about marriage being a special interest or a civil right.

"African-American is what I am – number one, a condition of being is what we are – not what we do," Washington said. "With homosexuality, it is not a condition of being, it is what people do. Homosexuality is identified and defined by behavior."

People of all ages attended the rally that included songs and the taking of an offering to support One Voice.

Some K-State students chose to attend as well.

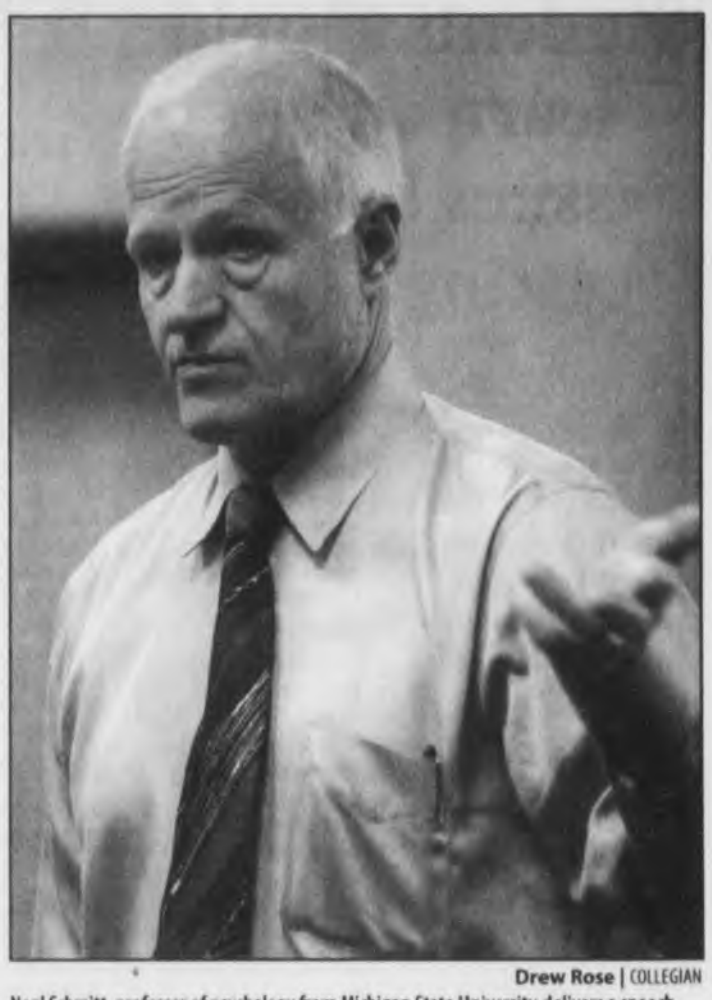
"I came to hear what they had to say, and I came because I support marriage is between one man and one woman," Jacob Holland, senior in radio and TV journalism, said. "I heard about it at my church. I wasn't sure what to expect; I knew that it would be an event that suggested marriage being between one man and one woman."

Holland said the speakers were informative and supported their points well.

"They had evidence to talk about what they were saying," he said. "They had proof to support the things that they were saying. I agree with the things that they said."

The final speaker of the evening was the Rev. Terry Fox from Immanuel Baptist Church in Wichita.

Fox said this was an exciting time for supporters of the amendment.



"This is just the beginning of the conservative resurgence in the state of Kansas," Fox said.

He also said he would support the gay marriage amendment, partly because it was outlined in scripture.

"I think that helps society to stand against those things. We stand against murder; we stand against all sorts of things to the benefit of society and I think this is another one of those issues," Hendricks said.

College admission policies should not require SAT scores

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN
Neal Schmitt, professor of psychology from Michigan State University delivers a speech Thursday afternoon about the relevance of tests like ACT and SAT and how they are related to how students are admitted.

Almost every high school senior goes through the stress of taking either the American College Testing Program exam or the Scholastic Aptitude Test.

However, colleges across the nation are beginning to turn away from these exams, and are leaning towards less-cognitive exams.

On Thursday, Neal Schmitt, a distinguished professor of psychology and management at Michigan State University, presented a lecture regarding these "non-cognitive" exams.

The lecture, titled "Exploring the Feasibility of Structured Non-cognitive College Admissions Procedures," discussed some of the findings of Schmitt's research.

For years, the SAT and ACT exams have been used to judge incoming freshman's preparedness for college.

In 2000, Richard Atkinson, the president of the University of California, voiced his opinion that SAT scores shouldn't be used for college admissions because the exams are too cognitive.

"These exams may not tell us anything about other areas we expect the students to engage in," Schmitt said. "We have to go to something that's less cognitive."

Schmitt described how many colleges are beginning to rely less on the old exams and more on personal interviews and essays.

The research that Schmitt and his colleagues conducted compared students' GPAs and standardized test scores to different aspects of their life, such as leadership abilities and multicultural appreciation.

When compared with SAT scores, Schmitt's research differed slightly, hopefully showing which students would excel in college.

"The results were interesting," Michelle Schneider, freshman in graphic design, said. "To see it made a difference when you added in personality."

One of the advantages of this style of exam is that universities will, hopefully, have a better idea of how a student will perform in the college setting.

Though Schmitt said that the exam that he gave subjects are not yet suitable for widespread use, he said that similar tests could be used to show students how they can better prepare themselves for college.

TO THE POINT

Students should learn about issues before casting votes

On April 5, Kansas voters must decide whether or not to accept an amendment to the Kansas Constitution that would define marriage as a union exclusively between one man and one woman.

If the amendment is passed, the state would no longer recognize any relationship other than a marriage as being entitled to the rights of marriage.

Before voting on this amendment, students need to take the time to educate themselves fully on both sides of the issue.

In a controversial debate such as this, emotions can run high and rational arguments are sometimes ignored in view of a person's preconceived ideas and prejudices on the issue.

Before voting, consider both sides of the issue. Talk to people who are both for and against it, and ask them why they feel the way they do. You might just be surprised.

Self-education is the best way to deal with these preconceived ideas. Knowing the basics of the arguments for and against the issue will provide the best basis for decision-making when heading to the polls.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Home or away on break?

Traveling provides much needed rest, relaxation over spring break

ABBY HILES

Greetings from New York City.

I know, I know. Class is still in session, lectures are still being held and people are still dutifully doing the crossword.

But, I am not in class. Or even in Kansas, for that matter. I have chosen to leave our little hamlet a few days early to bask in the glow of a long standing college tradition.

I am officially on spring break.

I flew out yesterday, and as my plane left Kansas City International Airport, I couldn't help but smile. No more boring Kansas – for at least 5 days.

To me, spring break is the one bastion of college life that everyone looks forward to.

And why shouldn't they?

This one week propped in the middle of the semester is when countless co-eds can honestly justify spending hundreds of dollars on alcohol and crappy crowded hotel rooms in tropical climates. Or in my case, wandering around the greatest city in the world wearing a winter coat and eating a really good bagel.

Spring break is the time of year when inhibitions are let loose, and people – fed up with class, work and Manhattan – can get out of town and relax for a while.

Granted, for those of you who are staying in Manhappenin' over break, the week doesn't really seem that special.

And I feel your pain.

For the last two years I stayed in town for spring break. I worked at my job, complained under my breath as other co-workers took off and went some place sunny and got paler by the day sitting in my cubicle answering phones.

But this year, I decided that I wasn't going to feel sorry for myself. So what if breaking abroad is costly? This is one time in my life when I get a week off and don't have to worry about taking vacation leave.

And by God, if it takes me a year to dig myself out of the credit card debt I assume by going on this trip, then so be it. This is my one chance to get out, and I'm going to take it.

Sure, spring break can be expensive. It's overpriced, people are underdressed and the places are über-crowded. But at the same time, anything can happen.

You might get a glimpse of your neighbor from grade school entering a wet boxer shorts contest or your second cousin showing off her "personality" to the crew from "Girls Gone Wild."

It is these experiences that make spring break so great.

College is the one time in your life where you can afford to be careless. And yes, you could probably have a great time staying in Manhappenin' this next week. The traffic will be quite slow, nobody will be in the bars and it is an optimal time to get your spring cleaning done.

But the university doesn't give us this time off so we can waste it in town.

Thousands of K-Staters are heading out abroad this next week, so don't be afraid – be one of them. A select few go to Europe. Most head on down south to places like Cabo San Lucas or the Bahamas. And then there is me: New York City or bust.

And I'm thinking about each and every one of you today as I hail a cab to Rockefeller Center.

So drop a little cash, get out of town and enjoy your free week.

From the Big Apple to the Little Apple, happy spring break!

Staying home saves money, provides lower stress level

ANNIE LEWIS

I would like to congratulate everyone that is traveling out of the state during spring break. I wish you the best, but I'm going to stay right here in exotic Manhattan.

That's what I get for being a poor college student. South Padre is a tad outside my budget, and for the life of me, I couldn't find anything exciting to do on $10.

Oh wait – I'm going to Wichita for two days. Watch out, Wichita.

Working hard all seven days of spring break has its perks, and for those of you who will be working too, let's do a little bragging.

MONEY

Let's face it: college is expensive. After I wrote a column last week about credit card debt, I am not about to charge up a $500 trip on a credit card. Staying right here and making money is smarter in the long run.

I have my whole life to travel once I get a full-time job, especially if I save up right now. Oh, and with everyone taking off, there are more hours available at my jobs. I ought to make enough money this break to enjoy my summer quite comfortably.

CLEANING

My mom always told me, "It won't clean itself," so I just lived in clutter. Now that I have my own place – or one-third of my own place – cleanliness and organization are much more important to me. Since I won't be obligated to go to classes next week, I'm going to attack my closet and that sticky kitchen floor.

The week off is excellent for creating a fresh start for Monday, March 28.

TRAFFIC

Unless Manhattan turns into a hot tourist spot next week, it will be so much easier to drive across town with all the people gone. I've always been a crazy driver myself, and unfortunately, there are other college students just like me.

Just because I'm the best karaoke superstar doesn't mean I should focus more on my talent than my driving. Luckily, most of the congestion on the streets will be eliminated for one week of solitude.

PARTIES

Since Manhattan isn't the biggest party town in the Midwest, I doubt people are going to travel here to host raves. I can finally lie down in my room at 11:30 p.m. and hear crickets chirping.

Have fun raising a ruckus wherever you go, because I am extremely elated that it won't be anywhere near me and my peaceful night's rest.

For those people who are traveling, have a blast. I do wish I could go to Texas or even Oklahoma. But some of us can't, so optimistically, keep looking on the sunny side.

There is no reason that staying in Manhattan has to be torture. It will be the exact opposite for me – pure heaven.

Rebuilding after a disaster

Students to spend break aiding tsunami victims

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Today, a group of K-State volunteers composed of faculty, alumni and students, will go to northern Indonesia, where they will help victims of the tsunami disaster rebuild their lives.

Ryan Stelk, a K-State faculty member, said disaster relief workers described the area's appearance as a place where people had withstood great hardships and had finally given up.

After workers arrived in January, the residents seemed to be rejuvenated. That's the spirit the K-State tsunami relief team plans to encourage, Stelk said.

Jenni Yohn, co-captain, said the team will work with the International Friendship Organization, a relief organization that is focusing its efforts on outlying villages. The organization has been rotating teams in and out of these areas every ten days for the last month and a half, Yohn said.

The K-State team will help rebuild schools and homes, hand out food to residents and build an orphanage for the children whose parents were killed in the disaster.

For team members Patrick and Lindsey Largen, the opportunity to take care of these children inspired them to help with relief efforts.

"One of things that's on my heart is the children there, being a mom," Lindsey Largen said.

Yohn said the team hopes to have the physical and emotional strength to handle the awful situations that it will encounter and not let the shock of the situation overpower the team's ability to handle the needs of the people.

"I can't even imagine the devastation that we're going to encounter," Yohn said.

This mission does pose some threats to volunteers. The province had been closed to outside interference for 18 months while the Indonesian government tried to deal with rebel groups.

However, after the tsunami struck, a cease-fire was declared and relief organizations were allowed in.

"The situation is so fluid and things are changing all the time," Yohn said. "It's really hard to know what type of situation we're going into."

Despite the physical danger and the emotional stress caused by leaving behind family and friends, the team is determined to go.

"We want them to know that they're not alone in the world," Stelk said. "We just want them to know that there are people who care for them."

Protesters rally against Bush, war

Protesters gathered on the corner of Anderson Avenue and 17th Street Thursday to protest the War on Terror and Bush's agenda.

The protesters were members of Manhattan Alliance for Peace and Justice. Anne Cowan, Manhattan resident, said the group is to raise awareness in Manhattan.

"We are trying to show the community that there's a large number of people that are against the war," Cowan said. "Too many people have been killed or wounded. We need to bring the troops home now; we are not accomplishing anything."

Stephanie Denton, sophomore in economics, agreed.

"It's been two years since it started and we haven't seen any results and we want to see an end to it," Denton said.

Nancy Perkins, Manhattan resident, said the group's members are concerned about the troops in Iraq.

"We would like to bring our troops home," Perkins said.

Mary McGivern, sophomore in psychology, said people often forget about the war.

"People tend to forget that this is happening because it isn't happening on our soil," McGivern said.

Matt Fields, sophomore in microbiology, said having family in Iraq has affected him.

"I have family over there and I am afraid for them," Fields said. "We are in an administration that is worried more about war and religion than politics."

Serving others while on spring break

By Maria Ladrón de Guevara
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While most students spend spring break at home or going to exotic places, 28 K-State students will travel hundreds of miles to volunteer during the break.

The Community Service Program is sending students on a spring break alternative trip. Students will be going to the following places: eight to Chicago, 10 to Dallas and 10 to Waterloo, Iowa.

Carol Gould, CSP director, said the alternative spring break program has been on and off since the 1990s and has been consistent since 2000. She said the students seem to get a lot out of it.

"It's really a productive way for students to experience a really pressing social issue," Gould said.

Whitney Szczucinski, community service connections coordinator, went to Dallas last year and she said she was very pleased with the program.

"We worked with the AIDS program in Dallas and it was amazing," Szczucinski said. "We do things that they don't have the time or the money to do."

Szczucinski said the AIDS program told them that more than $6,000 was saved in the cost of labor alone just by having them volunteer.

"We do a lot of physical labor, they need a lot of help to keep up stuff like that." Jerod Topliff, senior in finance, said. "Other volunteers like to work with the residents, but the other work needs to get done."

The Waterloo team will work with Habitat for Humanity with students from the University of Chicago and Northwestern University.

"We will be working on two constructions," Erin Waddle, CSP and AmeriCorps VISTA member, said. "It's one of those projects where you can actually step back and see what you did."

The Chicago team will be working in various projects such as serving meals, attending domestic violence workshops, and beginning a landscaping project.

The cost of the trips range from $100 to $150 and they will last six days.

"The first year I went in this trip was because I was too broke to go somewhere else," Topliff said. "I just really liked the people there and I look forward to seeing them every year."

This will be Topliff's third consecutive year going on this trip.

"Every year when we get back they say it's the best spring break they've ever had," he said.

Topliff has not only made great bonds, but he has also learned new things.

"It's made me realize that everyone has the potential to be awesome people no matter what they've been through," he said.

Students to compete in math competition

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State math club will use their wit and knowledge to compete at the Kansas Collegiate Mathematics Competition this weekend in Lawrence.

Six students will vie for the top prize, which Jeffrey Amos, junior in mathematics, said the two K-State teams have a good chance of winning.

"I think it's likely that we have a strong enough team that we'll get the top two ranks," Amos said. "I think it's likely our team will win."

Mike Higgins, senior in mathematics, said K-State has some of the top math majors in the competition, which will help their chances of winning.

"I want to sweep everything," he said. "I think we'll get the top three or four positions as well as the top overall."

Amos said although he is not sure what areas of math the competition will entail, he believes the majority of the competition will be technical rather than skills learned in the classroom.

"The majority of math competitions aren't testing like technical competence," he said. "The math competition is testing cleverness where you have to come up with a logical solution."

Higgins said he hopes the competition is similar to the Putnam exam, which he took earlier this year.

"I hope we have to use more integrity than math," he said.

Amos said although he usually prepares for competitions, he hasn't studied for this one.

"I haven't done any special preparation for it," he said. "I've done preparation in the past, but I really don't know what's going on."

Higgins said through this competition, he wants the K-State math club to gain an understanding of the type of research going on in the field of mathematics.

TENNIS

Cats looking for 1st road win against Baylor

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After beginning an eight-game road trip with two straight losses, K-State's women's tennis will try for its first road win against 17th-ranked Baylor this weekend in Waco, Texas.

The Wildcats have lost 11 straight road matches this season, and the road gets no easier against the highly-touted Bears, who are 10-2 this season and 2-0 in the Big 12.

Head Coach Steve Bietau said Baylor will be among the strongest teams K-State faces this season, and the Bears will be a tough match for the Wildcats.

"Baylor is one of the better teams we'll see all year," Bietau said. "They have better players than a lot of teams we face. You would have to say a win for us would be a huge upset."

With arguably the toughest match of the year looming this weekend, senior Maria Rosenberg said she has been somewhat disappointed in the team's play, and thinks an improved effort from the team will be needed to beat the Bears.

"Although we've made progress in some areas, it hasn't been enough to overall guarantee any victory," she said. "To beat Baylor, we are going to need definitely a better performance than we have shown."

Rosenberg said the desire to win exists on this team, but isn't necessarily evident in practice and matches.

"I think that overall attitude and belief in ourselves, and the actual desire to win needs to show through in practice and in the matches," she said. "It's not really showing."

One of the Wildcats whose actions have meant good things for K-State has been freshman Tamar Kvaratskhelia.

Kvaratskhelia enters the Baylor match playing the No. 2 singles spot in search of her 23rd win, which would give her K-State's freshman season singles win record.

Kvaratskhelia said as a freshman, she feels a lot of pressure to perform at a high level.

"I feel a lot of pressure from my coach, from the university, from my friends and from everybody, it's kind of hard," she said. "It feels good when you're playing well and showing good results though.

Kvaratskhelia and the upset-minded Wildcats will try to put an end to Baylor's 10-match winning streak at noon on Saturday.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Team sent to Seattle in style

Tourney-bound women greeted by fans at airport

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State fans young and old packed the Manhattan Regional Airport lobby Thursday morning, adorned in purple and holding signs, all waiting for a glimpse of the K-State women's basketball team.

"I love Deb Patterson," one sign read.

"Good luck Lady Cats," another one read.

The event was a sendoff for the No. 16 Wildcats, who were leaving for Seattle, the site of their first-round NCAA Tournament game against Bowling Green.

Many of the young fans, out of school on spring break, waved pompoms as they waited anxiously for the team to arrive.

Alex Perce, 9, came with two of her friends to see their favorite player, senior forward Kendra Wecker.

"I think she's just a really good player," Perce said. "I came so I could wish her good luck."

When the Wildcats arrived, they were greeted with cheers, applause and even a recording of the K-State fight song.

Katy Ames said she made the trip to Manhattan to give say good luck one last time to the team.

"I can't go to Seattle, so I came here to send them off and let them know we're behind them," Ames said.

As sophomore guard Claire Coggins walked through the crowd, signing autographs and posing for pictures, she was asked if she thought the Wildcats would make it back to Kansas City, Mo., for the Sweet 16.

"We're going to be there," Coggins said matter-of-factly.

Senior guard Chelsea Domenico said she was grateful to the Wildcat fans for their support all season long.

"Its awesome," Domenico said. "It shows the support and love we have from our fans. They've been there for us through wins and losses, and they come back and show us so much support. Its so great to see everyone here."

BASEBALL

K-State on a roll starting league play against Cowboys

Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State will carry an eight-game winning streak into the start of Big 12 play today as it travels to Stillwater, Okla., to take on Oklahoma State.

K-State is 10-80 all-time in Stillwater, and last defeated the Cowboys in Stillwater in 2001 with a 13-8 win.

Last season, the Wildcats were swept when the Cowboys traveled to Manhattan. The last time the Wildcats defeated the Cowboys was March 23, 2002.

The Wildcats are currently the Big 12 leaders in batting average with a .364 average.

Three of the top six batting averages in the Big 12 are currently held by K-State players. Senior Terry Blunt leads the Big 12 with a .444 average, sophomore Jared Goedert is third (.442) and junior Brandon Farr is sixth (.419).

During K-State's eight-game winning streak, the Wildcats have hit .426 as a team. The Wildcats have collected 52 extra-base hits, 35 doubles, five triples and 12 homers, which has led them to outscoring their opponents 126-23.

The pitching staff for the Wildcats has walked only 42 batters and has struck out 115 batters in 145.0 innings. The Wildcat bullpen has a 1-1 record with a 1.93 ERA in 51.1 innings of relief. They have given up 14 runs, 11 earned, on 47 hits while walking 14 and striking out 40.

Junior starting pitcher Adam Cowart has still not given up a walk through 29.1 innings.

Oklahoma State heads into the weekend riding a four-game winning streak. The Cowboys are hitting .333 as a team, led by junior first baseman Adam Carr, who is batting .391.

Action begins at 7 tonight at Allie P. Reynolds Stadium. On Saturday, action continues at 2 p.m., and Sunday, first pitch is at 1 p.m.

Fundamentals key to winning games

When solving a crime, Sherlock Holmes often told his trusty sidekick Doctor Watson, "It's elementary, my dear Watson."

MATTHEW GIRARD

Now, you might be wondering why I'm referring to a 19th-century fictional detective in a sports column, but this was the phrase running through my head as I watched many a basketball game during the Big 12 Conference tournament last week in Kansas City, Mo.

Basketball is elementary.

Free-throws and rebounds are the aspects of the game that decide winners and losers.

In the 11 games of the men's conference tournament, the winners shot 76 percent from the free throw line, to the losers' 71 percent. The same was true on the women's side. The winners shot 71 percent from the free-throw line, while the losers shot 68 percent.

These free-throw percentages may seem close, but look at how close the games were.

The men's games were decided by an average of only 7.1 points per game and only three games involved double-digit wins. The women's games were decided by 10.2 points per game, but if you throw out Oklahoma's 21-point win over Texas A&M and K-State's 26-point win over Nebraska, there was only a difference of 7.2 points per game.

Rebounding was also a difference maker on both sides of the tournament. In both the men's and women's games, the winners averaged 37 rebounds per game and the losing teams averaged 33 rebounds per game.

Take the Wildcats for example – in the men's win over Texas A&M, K-State out-rebounded the Aggies by four, and in the loss to Kansas, the Jayhawks grabbed 16 more rebounds than the Wildcats.

I know. It seems so obvious and simple, but all too often, when I overhear people talking about games, they discuss how much talent a team has, or how many points a player had, and that's why they won the game.

Too much emphasis is put on the team's collective or individual talent.

Ability does play a factor in the outcome of games, but really, it's the elementary fundamentals.

So, when you are watching the NCAA Tournament over the break, be watching for which teams do the fundamentals well, and I'll bet my honeymoon spending fund (my wife is going to hate me for this), those are the teams that play deep into the tournament.

CFB | Trailblazing former OU football star dies

OKLAHOMA CITY — Prentice Gautt, the first black football player at the University of Oklahoma, died Thursday.

Gautt

Gautt, 67, died in Lawrence, Kan., after being hospitalized for several days with flu-like symptoms, his wife, Sandra Gautt, said from their home in Lawrence.

Former OU coach Bud Wilkinson was pressured against giving Gautt a scholarship. A group of black doctors and pharmacists gave money for Gautt to attend OU. Within a year, Gautt was given an OU scholarship and the donated amounts were given to another black student.

Gautt, considered OU's best player in 1958, was a two-time All-Big Eight player and 1959 Orange Bowl MVP.

MLB | Bonds has 2nd operation on right knee

SAN FRANCISCO — Barry Bonds underwent a second operation on his right knee Thursday morning, a setback that could complicate his hopes of being ready for opening day.

Bonds

While the San Francisco Giants offered no timetable for the slugger's return, it took the seven-time NL MVP more time than expected to recover from the original surgery on the knee Jan. 31.

The Giants said in a statement that Bonds had arthroscopic surgery to repair tears in the knee.

The operation was performed in the Bay Area by Art Ting, the same doctor who performed Bonds' earlier surgery.

Bonds, 40, has "experienced periods of swelling in his knee following an incident when he accidentally hit his knee on a table at SBC Park Feb. 4.

Neither rest nor his current rehabilitation program has helped alleviate the periodic swelling," the Giants said in a release.

Stylishly stepping into spring

Spring must-haves include bohemian shirts, ballet flats

By Courtney Lair
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As designer Coco Chanel once said, "Fashion is not something that exists in dresses only; fashion is something in the air. It's the wind that blows in the new fashion; you feel it coming, you smell it...in the sky, in the street. Fashion has to do with ideas, the way we live, what is happening."

This spring, the winds of fashion have blown in a completely new aura. The free-spirited, earthy vibes are on the opposite end of the style spectrum from the structured, lady-like, almost uptight feelings we saw this past fall and winter. Here are a few of spring's overall themes and the diverse trends they include.

THE NEW BOHEMIAN

The innocent spirit of spring has come to life in a bohemian trend. Celebrities Sienna Miller and Kate Moss have been working the hippie-ish vibe long before it became hot. With just a few key pieces and a carefree attitude, this look is easily attainable.

A tiered or flounced skirt in a feather-weight cotton falling to the knee or all the way to the ankle is a necessity. After adding a basic white tank, the only thing left to do is accessorize.

Try a wide woven leather belt (in brown, of course) slung low on the hips. Gold, turquoise, and coral are not only huge in the spring's color palette, but are also big jewelry picks. Layering necklaces – chains, colorful beads and charms is a non-conventional way to add a whimsical touch.

Fashionistas everywhere have been trading in their stilettos for spring's new ballet flats and flat sandals, which go perfectly with the bohemian-luxe theme. Invest in a pair of flats now because they are super versatile for spring and summer, and your feet will thank you.

This is a great time to check out the thrift stores in town to find something fabulous and unique, because that is what this whole look is about. For example, a pair of worn-in cowboy boots would add the perfect vintage touch. So,embrace your inner hippie and go boho!

MARINE LIFE

There's something very refreshing about the nautical theme that pops up every spring, and this year it seems to be more prominent than ever. Taking advantage of this classically cool look requires just a few items.

The sailor pant is big this spring - think white, flared or wide-legged with brass buttons. On that note, white pants and jeans are making a huge appearance, thanks to denim brands such as Seven for All Mankind and Citizens of Humanity, who have managed to overcome what every girl thought was impossible – successfully making white jeans super cute and alarmingly flattering.

The classic boatneck top with the crisp, horizontal stripes is a nautical necessity. And to complete the overall look, rope trim has been showing up on sandals, belts and handbags. Remember, the sailor chic objective is to look classy and chic, so when accessorizing, try to avoid going overboard.

ETHNIC INVASION

Thanks to globe-trotters everywhere for bringing the inspiration of beautiful pieces from cultures around the world. From Morocco to India to Greece, the unique styles of different ethnicities have been the muse for a myriad of collections this spring.

Ethnic looks best when it is not done from head to toe. To avoid looking like you're wearing a costume, let one piece take center stage and keep the rest of the outfit simple and sleek.

Brightly colored tunics channeling the Indian Bollywood vibe can be worn at the beach or for a casual night out. Looks range from cotton to silk and bejeweled to embroidered. An armful of Moroccan-style bangles and a pair of gold or embellished flat sandals would complement the look nicely without being too overpowering.

African influences are also making their way into fashion. Tribal prints on skirts and sun dresses, safari-style jackets with utility pockets, wooden jewelry and straw handbags are all things to look for. The color palette includes khaki, white, brown, gold and random splashes of colors like red and yellow. Animal prints in leopard, zebra and tiger are hot for summer and are just another way to sport the safari style.

Release your inner Greek goddess by wearing one of the new Greek-inspired empire waist tops. Give in to the delicate femininity of soft pleats and flowing fabrics. Gold gladiator flat sandals a la Helen of Troy are a great way to accessorize this look.

Whether you choose to follow the bohemian, nautical or ethnic style - or any at all - keep in mind that this spring, fashion is very carefree and non-structured. In my opinion, it always looks best to choose one trendy item and then use your imagination on the rest of the outfit. That way when you walk down the street, you look like you and nobody else.

CELEB NEWS

NBC re-signs several favorites for fall lineup

It's not a shocker of Dewey-defeats-Truman proportions, but The West Wing has just been reelected for a seventh term.

A day after the Hollywood trades suggested a deal was imminent to bring the Emmy-winning political potboiler back for a swan-song season without longtime President Josiah Barlet (Martin Sheen) in the Oval Office, NBC confirmed as much Thursday, announcing The West Wing had been reupped for the 2005-06 season, along with Joey, Crossing Jordan, Las Vegas and, as previously reported, ER, which was picked up through 2008.

Of that group, The West Wing has the lowest ratings, averaging 11.3 million viewers in its 9 p.m. Wednesday slot. Affected by Fox's American Idol and the failure of NBC to establish a good lead-in, the White House drama is down from 11.7 million viewers last year. In its glory days back in season three, The West Wing averaged 17.1 million and was a top 10 fixture.

'Incredibles' sell 5 million DVDs on its 1st day out

The Oscar-award winning animated film "The Incredibles" sold 5 million units on its first day in release on DVD and video in North America, Pixar Animation Studios Inc and The Walt Disney Company said.

"The Incredibles," the story of a family of superheroes, was released on Nov. 5 and has taken in about $261 million at the box office. The DVD and video sell for a suggested retail price of $29.99.

The film, which won two Academy Awards in February, is the sixth feature released by the Disney-Pixar partnership that also produced the blockbusters "Finding Nemo" and "Toy Story."

Dueling rappers release CDs of various quality

"The Documentary"

Album review by Mike Sibilla

Courtesy art

Dre v. Eazy-E. Jay-Z v. Nas. Ja Rule v. 50 Cent. Hip-hop has been full of epic battles rising between its stars. The outcomes of such duels have been as mild as disses found in the liner notes of albums to the unfortunate assassinations of legends (2Pac, Notorious B.I.G.) when tensions become unbearably high.

The most recent hip-hop battle to rise has been between 50 Cent and his newest protégé, The Game. It became official during Funkmaster Flex's radio show on Hot 97 in New York. 50 Cent announced that The Game's services were no longer needed as a part of G-Unit. The most likely reason for the cold shoulder from 50 is because The Game has been reportedly saying that he would like to record tracks with artists such as Nas, among others. Many of the rappers that The Game would like to work with are known rivals of 50 Cent.

In the midst of this controversy, both 50 Cent and The Game released new albums. The Game released his debut album, "The Documentary," while 50 Cent dropped his sophomore disc, "The Massacre."

"The Documentary," was released when The Game was still a part of 50's G-Unit label. The Game's debut was faced with a great deal of hype. Stakes are high.

Hip-hop's top producers were recruited to create beats for "The Documentary." Dr. Dre, Timbaland, Kanye West, Just Blaze, are among the A-listers found on the album. The production is the album's greatest asset: there is uniformity in sound and beats that is rarely found among rap albums today.

But an album is nothing with great tracks and a lousy lyricist. This is where The Game steps up and helps create a truly excellent debut album.

While The Game still has a little ways to go in order to perfect his own unique flow and voice, he can spit rhymes among the best. The Game has studied the masters, and names are dropped in almost every track: Notorious B.I.G., Jay-Z, Snoop Dogg, and Eric B. and Rakim are among many that are mentioned among the rhymes.

Aside from providing the listener "The Beginner's History of Rap," The Game brings wit, style, and heart. Each of these tracks is full of idiosyncrasies that let the listener know this is The Game's time to shine. After a brief intro, "Westside Story" opens the disc with beautiful production by Dr. Dre. The track is a powerful argument for the West Coast's relevancy and domination of rap music.

What pushes "The Documentary" into greatness is The Game's ability to show humility. During "Start From Scratch," one can hear The Game's voice crack as he tells the story of his life. "Like Father, Like Son" is an excellent ode from The Game in describing the love and devotion he has for his son.

"The Massacre"

Album review by Mike Sibilla

Courtesy art

50 Cent's new album, "The Massacre," lacks much of the emotion and energy found in The Game's debut.

The opener features a young girl saying that she sends a Valentine's day message from 50 Cent to his fans before she is gunned down by '50's crew.' 50's threats seem forced, as do the attempts at comedy ("Gattman and Robbin'") and gravity ("I'm Supposed to Die Tonight").

The singles "Candy Shop" and "Disco Inferno" seem like retreads, another attempt at having another club anthem along the lines of "In 'Da Club."

The best song on "The Massacre" is "A Baltimore Love Thing," a song where 50 personifies himself as heroin and sings a brilliant song about his control over the addict. This is the 50 Cent that I want to see, a clever rapper not pinned down with the responsibility of making a groundbreaking single.

Between these two rivals it is easy to see who has won round one. The Game has created a debut that introduces him as a powerful gift to hip-hop and the public. 50 Cent stills needs an album that will live up to his potential.

Unfortunately, marketing's hold on the public will guarantee 50 Cent sells tens of millions of copies while The Game sells a still-excellent 2 million. Both CD's are a worthwhile listen, but only "The Documentary" proves to be the outstanding album.

Professor leading way for safer roads

By Alex Peak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

LeCrecia McCauley, 9th grade student at Manhattan East High School sits in a driving simulation car in Bluemont Hall Wednesday afternoon. The car is part of an experimental simulation and training assessment to lead the way for safer driving habits for teens.

Catrina Rawson
COLLEGIAN

When Renee Slick was younger, her father was killed while changing a flat tire.

Her father had pulled to the side of the highway to change his tire when he was struck by a vehicle whose driver had fallen asleep and had driven off the road. Her father lived for a few months after the accident, but eventually died due to complications. As a result, Slick decided to shift her studies from leadership to research and psychology and became interested in how to make the road safer.

Slick, assistant professor in psychology and the director of the STAR, or simulation, training, assessment and research lab at K-State, uses an experimental simulation to lead the way to safer driving habits for teens.

The lab is part of a project with Drive Safety, a company that builds simulations for testing. Slick was the CEO of the company before coming to K-State. She said she was so impressed with the equipment and technology that when she came to K-State, she proposed to bring the lab here.

"The purpose is to find out if simulation technology can be used to assess drivers' skills and training, primarily for teenagers," Frank Weinranch, vice president of Business Development at Drive Safety, said.

Slick said the program focuses on the psychology behind driving and tries to help young drivers understand attitudes and behaviors pertaining to driving that could be dangerous.

The program considers experimental questions and includes research to find out what gets the best results. She said that the STAR lab at K-State is the only lab in the country that exclusively uses simulators.

"We can put student drivers into potentially hazardous weather conditions in complete safety," Doug Evans, chief technology officer at Drive Safety, said.

He said it is the program's goal to help reduce the number of crashes and injuries and ultimately, the number of fatalities in young drivers.

Slick said that the most dangerous time for teens is right after they get their driver's licenses.

"At age 16, they are three times more likely to get in an accident than at age 18 and 10 times more likely to die in a crash and most (teens) don't know this," Slick said.

The lab is open eight hours a day for K-State students to do research and get experiment credits for psychology classes.

Beth Cady, a doctoral student in psychology, has worked in the lab for the last year and a half. She said that the lab began research with students from the Manhattan-Ogden school district.

"I enjoy doing background research, analyzing data and working with the kids," Cady said.

She said that the kids are very excited to do the program, especially if they haven't recieved their licenses yet and get to have the driving experience.

"The parents have been very supportive," she said.

Slick said she is doing her best to make something positive out of something very devastating.

"Anyone who has ever lost someone in an accident knows it [the Drive Safety program] is worth it," Slick said.

Local legislators available for forum

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Local legislators will be discussing issues they have been working on and answering questions at the Legislative Forum at 8 a.m. Saturday in the Manhattan Town Center food court.

The forum is free to the public and depending on the issues and number of questions, it should last for an hour to an hour and a half, said Lyle Butler, president of the Manhattan area Chamber of Commerce.

"This is something we (the Chamber of Commerce) sponsor every year," Butler said. "We get legislators from Manhattan and the surrounding area to talk. Each will have at least five minutes to discuss items they're working on and answer questions the public might have."

There are generally three forums each year, two for legislators and one for the Chamber of Commerce, Butler said.

One of the issues that will probably will be discussed will be education, Sen. Roger Reitz, R-Manhattan, said.

The forum is a good chance to keep in touch with the public, Reitz said.

"I think (forums) are potentially beneficial," Reitz said. "Normally, they are well attended and I am responsive to anything my constituents have to say."

Rep. Tom Hawk, D-Manhattan, said the two biggest issues that he might discuss are education and health care, because they are big budget issues.

"Aging health care issues are important," Hawk said. "Another one is stem cell research. Another issue is K-State funding and how the regents will be funding education."

Hawk said a hot topic he might touch on is STAR bonds.

He said STAR bonds use sales tax for specific renovations. This is important to Manhattan because STAR bonds might be used to help fund the renovations in downtown Manhattan that would include a museum.

STAR bonds were used to fund the Kansas Speedway and other big projects.

Forums with the public are important to the democratic process, Hawk said.

He said any contact is important to let the public know how he makes decisions as well as to tell him what they think.

"Not all of the public agrees to what's going on," Hawk said. "But it's important to have the best contact possible. I try to let everyone know that I'm making the best decisions I can. This way they can hear why I made the decisions I make."

MURRAY | Counseling services available for students

However, Carter said he disagreed.

"I don't necessarily think it gave people a bad impression of the university or the English department," Carter said. "I think it was more a representation of Murray as a person not necessarily connected to the university."

Carter said it seemed to him as if Murray was in a desperate situation.

"His kid might have been taken away forever," he said. "I don't think the university chooses bad people, but I think this is something that happens kind of out of desperation."

Before Ross' murder, she had told Murray she planned to move to California and marry Larry Lima on Nov. 24 after gaining custody of their daughter.

Ross had met Lima in September 2002 in Wichita at a workshop on alternative healing techniques. Ross and Murray divorced in spring 2003.

The next step for K-State and the English department would be to move on, Grant said.

"They are going to have to hire someone to fill his position, and I think they will have to provide some kind of outlet for students if they feel they need to communicate about it," she said.

Dorinda Lambert, associate director of K-State Counseling Services, said they will have counselors available for those who want to talk about their concerns regarding Murray. She said they will also meet with larger groups who would like to debrief.

"We haven't had a request about that yet with the English department, but they are certainly welcome to do that," Lambert said. "I do know that in the past we have made offers to the English department that we would be glad to help."

Murray's conviction can be hard to grasp, Carter said.

"It's strange because when you look at someone you don't necessarily think they are capable to murdering another human being," he said. "To add on to that, he was a teacher, kind of an authority figure."

VERDICT | Professor convicted of 1st degree murder

Internet searches were especially incriminating as well as the nearly 10 hours of taped police interviews, which the jury reviewed again during deliberations.

Kihm said that the trial was stressful.

"It's emotional, but I tried to stay detached," he said.

The professionalism maintained by other jurors made Kihm's involvement in the trial a privilege, he said.

Juror Robert Wagner agreed.

Both jurors who remained for questions said that there were doubts, but not enough to be considered reasonable doubt. It was not reasonable that all of the events and evidence pointed to just coincidence, Kihm said.

Danny Ross later praised the prosecution and the Sheriff's department for their persistence, saying that the family was very pleased with special prosecutor Tom Bath and that Angela Wilson's closing arguments were excellent.

He said the outcome of the trial provided "justice for Carmin and our granddaughter to raise as Carmin would have wanted." Ciara, the daughter of Murray and Carmin Ross, is now in the custody of Ross' parents.

Larry Lima, Carmin Ross' fiancé, had planned to move to Lawrence. He said he plans to be a part of Ciara's life. Lima said that Murray had brought a lot of unnecessary pain to the people around him.

"If he had any compassion in him, he would have chosen another way," he said. Lima said that he will work towards Ross' goals of peace, non-violence, and social justice. He said he felt privileged to be a part of Ross' family in any way that he could.

After the verdict was read, a deputy led Murray from the courtroom to a holding cell in the Douglas County Law Enforcement Center, bringing the first-degree murder trial to a close.

Defense attorneys Eye and Pedro Irigonegaray spent nearly an hour with Murray in his holding cell after the verdict. They said he was "saddened" by the result. Irigonegaray said the sentencing options in a first-degree murder case are extremely limited, and Murray faces life in prison with the possibility of parole after 25 years.

Assistant district attorney Angela Wilson used Murray's own words when explaining the prosecution's victory.

"There is no perfect murder," she said, referring to Murray's comments made during taped police interviews. "The case was absolutely primarily based on circumstantial evidence. The circumstances all added up and all pointed to (Murray)."

She said she was pleased Ross' family will get custody of Ciara. Special prosecutor Tom Bath said the prosecution had developed a close relationship with the family.

"It's a big job. It's nerve-racking," Bath said. "While there was a lack of physical evidence tying Murray to the scene of the crime, the circumstantial evidence was enough to convict him."

Murray had been suspended with pay from K-State since being arrested in October 2004. University lawyer Dick Seaton said following the verdict that Murray's employment had been immediately terminated.

Fort Riley families search for Easter eggs, give holiday support

By Jessica Grant
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Easter morning began well for 6-year-old Kyle Bates.

"I found the first Easter egg this morning, but it was right next to me," Bates said.

Bates was also pleased with the gifts she received from the Easter bunny, who had visited her home the previous night.

"My favorite (present) was a Doodle Bear," Bates said.

Bates was one of many children who participated in an Easter egg hunt on Sunday afternoon. The hunt was hosted by Fort Riley and the Fort Riley Morale Welfare and Recreation program and took place at the Riley Conference Center Grounds.

Steve Tulley, recreational chief for Fort Riley, said the Easter egg hunt runs in conjunction with a brunch that is served at the Conference Center Grounds every Easter.

The afternoon also included an egg-tossing contest and egg races where contestants placed eggs on spoons and dashed to the finish line.

"We've been doing the hunt forever," Scott Scherberger, event organizer, said. "The hunt is for soldiers and their families and the whole community. The hunt is open to anyone who wants to come."

Scherberger said last year's hunt drew 350 children, despite bad weather.

"Today the weather is great, so we could have even more," Scherberger said.

The hunt was divided into three parts, with each section being for Man arrested, charged with child sexual exploitation

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Manhattan resident was arrested and charged with sexual exploitation of a child Friday.

Bryan Dawson, 1927 Crescent Drive, 24, was arrested at 2 a.m. Friday in relation to an incident that occurred in September 2004, according to a news release.

Bond was set at $10,000. Riley County Jail said Dawson was released on bond.

The victim is a 16-year-old female from Riley County.

Riley County Police Department Sgt. Connie Miller she could not release what the relationship of the victim and the suspect was.

According to Kansas statutes, sexual exploitation of a child is getting a child less than 18 years old "to engage in sexually explicit conduct for the purpose of promoting any performance" or possessing any printed, visual or audio medium depicting a minor engaging in sexually explicit conduct.

Miller said the investigation is still ongoing and had been at the time of the arrest.

"That's the time they felt they had enough information for the arrest," she said.

Kansas legislators discuss education funding bill

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Kansas legislative is discussing education funding and local legislators are concerned.

Manhattan residents attended a forum where local legislators answered questions on what's happening in the legislature March 19. It was sponsored by Kansas Gas Service and SBC Communications.

Sen. Roger Reitz, R-Manhattan, said raising taxes will have to happen to provide enough funding for education.

"What we are looking for is adequate funding," Reitz said. "This is the time we're going to have to deal with it. If we're going to raise taxes, we're going to have to do it now."

The Senate passed an education-funding bill Friday, which is now being sent to the House of Representatives.

The bill increases funding for K-12 public schools by $117 million, but it could be more if tax revenues are higher than expected, according to the Topeka Capital-Journal. It does not increase taxes.

The Kansas Supreme Court ruled in January the funding formula must be fixed by April 12, and this bill is the legislature's answer.

"We need to fund our education, and we need to do it honestly with funds that are going to be there," he said.

Rep. Richard Carlson, R-St. Marys, Kan., said he does not support a tax increase, because he ran on a platform saying he would not raise taxes.

Rep. Sydney Carlin, D-Manhattan, is on the Taxation and Higher Education committees. She said serving on the tax committee has been eye-opening, because exemptions are offered often.

"We have really allowed our tax base to be eroded through tax exemptions," Carlin said.

The House passed a budget bill March 17 that, as written, will leave Kansas $404 million in debt by 2008, Carlin said.

"This is not responsible government," she said. "We either aren't going to spend it or are going to have to tax for it."

About $2.3 million was cut from Board of Regents universities to K-12 education in the budget plan. Rep. Tom Hawk, D-Manhattan, said this is not fair for higher education.

"I don't think that's right for the state to take those non-general funds money and sweep those in," Hawk said.

Tax refunds can be used to reduce debt

By Kerry Fischer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Tax season is here, and that means students will be getting tax refunds.

"It's fun to get a refund because it's a forced savings," Carol Young, a family financial management extension specialist in the College of Human Ecology, said.

Young said that students should put their tax refunds toward substantial endeavors, like paying off debts, before treating themselves. She offered three places to put refund money.

Young said the first thing students should evaluate is what they owe. She said students should look at any outstanding bills or overdue rent that needs to be paid and use tax refund money toward those debts. She also said using tax refunds would be good to pay off any credit card debt.

"Sometimes when you get a refund, you think of it as extra money," Young said, "but it's not extra money, it's part of your budget."

Some students at K-State plan on using their tax refunds to pay off debt.

"My husband and I are using our tax refund for bills and towards our trip to Washington, D.C., in the summer," Kristen Murphy, senior in social science, said.

Some students are using their refund money to pay tuition and fees.

"My tax refund will be put toward spring break or fees for a class I added this semester," Shiricia Watson, senior in Spanish, said. "I may also put it toward bills for this month."

Young said the second area students should look to putting their tax refund money is into anticipated expenses. She advised putting some money aside in an emergency fund to cover things like car repairs or new tires so students do not have to use their credit cards.

"Students should have a plan with what they want to do with their money," Young said.

Third, Young said that students should put some of their tax refund money into a savings account.

"Savings allows for a new car after graduation," Young said of possible things to save for in the future.

Finally, the last thing that students should do with their money is treat themselves.

"That's where most people start," Young said. She said that many students tend to spend their money right away because it's there. She said a lot of students buy new electronics or clothes for themselves. While she said it's good that students treat themselves, they should first spend it on needs.

"It's wise to avoid as much debt as they can," Young said.

WORLD IN REVIEW: 7 THINGS YOU DIDN'T KNOW 7 DAYS AGO

Women's NCAA run cut short

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN

Kendra Wecker goes for a rebound along with Vanderbilt's Ashley Earley.

Women's basketball ended Monday night when Vanderbilt beat K-State 63-60 in the second round of the NCAA Tournament in Seattle. The loss also ended the careers of one of the most talented senior classes in K-State history, including Big 12 player of the year Kendra Wecker, Laurie Koehn, and Megan Mahoney. Despite the loss, Koehn broke the NCAA three-point record, making three in the game.

WOMAN BITES INTO A FINGER

A woman ate more than chili at a San Jose, Calif., Wendy's restaurant Tuesday – she also bit into part of a human finger. Santa Clara County Health Department officials are now investigating the incident after the woman left the restaurant ill and emotionally upset when she found out what it was. Following the incident, officials counted the hands of Wendy's workers, and said all digits were intact. Officials say the cooked finger could have come from a food processing plant that supplies for the company.

BTK BOOK HITS STORES

Robert Beattie had to change the ending to a book he's been working on for more than two years. The book, "Nightmare in Wichita: The Hunt for the BTK Strangler," originally ended with the line, "He's still out there." After Park City, Kan., resident Dennis Rader's recent arrest as the BTK serial killer, though, Beattie added another chapter before his book hit local stores and online sites Friday. The book's original sale date was set for this summer, but was bumped up following Rader's arrest.

BOY GOES ON SHOOTING SPREE

A teenager shot his grandfather and his companion before going on a shooting rampage at his Red Lake High School Monday in Minnesota. Sixteen-year-old Jeff Weise shot and killed 10 people, including himself, and injured more than seven people when he opened fire at the high school he attended. Officials say it is the worst high school shooting since the Columbine incident in April 1999, which left 15 people dead.

ABORTION PRIVACY RIGHTS DEBATE

News conferences over abortion and medical privacy rights in Kansas took center stage in Washington, D.C., Wednesday with Kansas Attorney General Phill Kline in the middle of it all. The Planned Parenthood organization took first action with a news conference downplaying Kline's recent efforts to subpoena patient records from its Kansas City office for an investigation that includes possible illegal late-term abortions. Later that afternoon, Kline, who is against abortion, spoke out on the issue, reassuring the women's privacy was not in jeopardy.

PITT, ANISTON FILE FOR DIVORCE

Hollywood power couple Jennifer Aniston and Brad Pitt are officially calling it quits after 4 years of marriage. Aniston filed for divorce Friday, citing irreconcilable differences with Pitt. The "Friends" star and the "Ocean's Twelve" hunk released a joint statement in January saying they were formally separating. The couple married on July 29, 2000, and have no children. It was the first marriage for both.

MINISTERS SPEAK OUT

Dozens of Kansas ministers want to make it clear that not all clergy in the state support a constitutional amendment to ban gay marriage. A letter to the public signed by more than 50 ministers says the amendment violates basic principals of all faiths, which is to treat people equally, with love and respect. They said if the amendment passes on April 5, it would make the lives of thousands of Kansans more difficult.

Who
Lee Hamilton, vice chair of the 9/11 Commission. Before leading the commission, he served as director for the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars. He served as a U.S. Representative on the House Committee on Foreign Affairs. He is currently serving on the U.S. Commission on National Security in the 21st Century, as well as being a member of the president's Homeland Security Advisory Council.

Why you should go
National security and the prevention of future attacks is still a national priority. In Fiscal Year 2005, the Department of Homeland Security received $40.2 billion — an increase of 10 percent from FY 2004. The 9/11 Commission report is still a New York Times Bestseller.

What he will talk about
Hamilton helped lead the independent committee that conducted hearings on the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks and released a blistering report addressing governmental shortfalls as well as suggesting the addition of a national intelligence director to prevent future attacks.

Lack of sleep impairs learning

By Amy Bolton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jenni John said that even though her body needs eight or nine hours of sleep each day, she averages only six.

"It's mainly due to schoolwork, but I have a lot of other commitments outside of school," said John, sophomore in secondary education.

Not getting enough sleep is common among college students, said Diana Fritz, the lead sleep technician at Mercy Regional Health Center's Sleep Lab.

"Not getting enough sleep impairs your physical performance, it impairs your mental performance and it probably makes you more susceptible to getting sick," said Jay Reppert, medical director at Lafene Health Center.

Fritz said that taking a 15- or 20-minute power nap can help you to feel more rested, but a 3-hour nap will throw off your sleep cycle for the next night.

The reason is because the body gets into a rhythm where it secretes hormones at the same time every day, Reppert said.

"It's harder on the body to have sleep cycles that change drastically from day to day," Reppert said.

To make the most of the time students have to sleep, Reppert recommends going to bed at the same time every night and only sleeping in bed, not studying or watching TV.

Electronic assistants increase class success

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's the world of physics – in the palm of your hand.

Dean Zollman, distinguished professor of physics, and Sanjay Rebello, assistant professor of physics, have been the driving forces behind an estimated $60,000 grant received from Hewlett-Packard, which provided 40 high-tech personal digital assistants for the classroom.

"They're like the Cadillacs of PDAs," Zollman said.

The hand-held assistants have wireless Web browsers and are connected to a wireless hub that also came with the grant from Hewlett-Packard.

With this prime technology, Zollman said he is able to send out a variety of questions to his class during lecture to determine if students comprehend the material.

"Three or four times in a class, somebody has to spend at least a minute or two thinking about what they've been learning," Zollman said.

Because of the professor's ability to monitor answers and participation, students are propelled to stay active in class.

"(It's) something that wakes them up, so that I can see what they're thinking about," Zollman said. "I can see where everyone is at."

While the PDAs give him instant feedback, Zollman said it is hard to stop class and revisit a topic without previous planning.

"The worst thing you could do is say, 'You guys really screwed up here, so go home and study it,'" Zollman said. "You kind of have to think on your feet."

While the PDAs are being used in the physics department, both Zollman and Rebello said that the technology could easily be used in other classes.

"This is not just confined to the physics department – it can contribute to the larger vision of the university," Rebello said.

Rebello said that based on the university's movement to be a wireless campus along with the past technology used, K-State has been the perfect match for the grant.

"It gave us several advantages over previous softwares," Rebello said.

The PDAs' portability has been an attractive feature in the classroom; they're wheeled from room to room in a cart used for storage and charging batteries.

"The mobility aspect gives us the ability to get information from real–world settings," Rebello said. "It enhances the connection between classroom learning and a real world setting. It helps to see the relevance of the concepts."

While these portable computers with Internet access could divert attention from class, Rebello said keeping students involved in class often rectifies this problem.

"It can serve as a distraction, but I didn't see it as much as a disadvantage as people think it is," Rebello said.

"If students are engaged, they don't have time to be distracted."

As a previous student in Zollman's concepts of physics class, Amber Zawojski, sophomore in art education, said the PDAs made learning interactive.

"I thought it made class more effective," Zawojski said. "The teacher knew, and they got honest answers and gave us a chance to try."

For the future of this technology, Rebello said he and Zollman are applying for another grant in May that would award 100 new PDAs and 14 tablet personal computers to the university.

TO THE POINT

Refusal to raise taxes misguided, hurts education

The Kansas Legislature continues to look for solutions to funding education in the state, but they are consistently ignoring one important and viable option: raising income taxes.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Conservative control of both houses of the legislature has precluded any increase in state income taxes. While the conservative efforts to keep income taxes low seem well-intentioned, their stubbornness is hurting students of all ages in Kansas.

The Senate has passed an education-funding bill that increases K-12 public school funding by a reported $117 million. This increase does not increase state income taxes but would put a heavier property tax burden on many rural Kansans.

The Kansas House has also passed a budget that will cut nearly $2.3 million from Board of Regents universities.

Refusing to raise taxes unfairly burdens those attending Regents universities. Those students' education may be undercut by the disappearing funds.

Raising income taxes may not be a popular solution, but it remains the most feasible option for funding education and fairly applying the tax burden to all Kansans.

Governor Sebelius should stand firm against legislation that will take money away from higher education and harm rural Kansas.

Entertaining history

South Park's social commentary more important than its crude humor

JACI BOYDSTON

While doing research for an upcoming paper, I recently found myself sitting in a dark room in Hale Library reading Washington Post editorials from the 1980s on microfilm.

I suddenly became jealous of college students 100 years from now. When they're assigned a paper on turn-of-the-21st-century society, where will they turn for social and political commentary on modern day issues?

My money's on "South Park."

The crudely animated cartoon gets a bad rap for its heavy reliance on toilet humor (and, Lord, are there a lot of fart jokes), but that's just the sugar that helps the medicine go down.

The real value of "South Park" is in the issues they tackle from week to week.

In the past year alone, the show's creators, Trey Parker and Matt Stone, have used "South Park" as a vehicle to comment on all kinds of issues, both serious and lighthearted.

Recent episodes tackled issues including Wal-Mart's effect on small communities, steroid use, "The Passion of the Christ," aggressive voter turn-out campaigns and the talent – or lack thereof – of pseudo-celebrity Paris Hilton.

To be fair, they also aired shows about dance-offs, Satan-worshipping forest animals and a boy with testicles on his chin, but that's not really the point.

This isn't a new direction for the show. Dating back to its first airing in August 1997, "South Park" has tackled the depletion of the rainforest, sexual harassment, breast augmentation, hate crimes, physical and mental handicaps, regulations of the Federal Communications Commission and the legitimacy of psychics.

Of course, average viewers probably aren't tuning in for heated political debate and commentary, but – amidst the head-flapping Canadians, weekly death sequences and singing pieces of poop – that's what they get.

"South Park" is a valuable social tool. It presents opinions every bit as valid as those on the editorial page of the New York Times, and it does so in a way that gets people interested, engaged and entertained.

Consider an episode titled "Douche and Turd" that aired a week before the 2004 presidential elections.

South Park Elementary is forced to choose a new school mascot after members of People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals complain about their current mascot, the cow.

The kids are asked to choose the new mascot, and they must vote for either a giant douche or a turd sandwich.

Most of the children form political parties to rally behind the candidate of their choice, but Stan decides there's no point in choosing between two equally unappealing options.

Stan's decision not to vote enrages the entire community. He even has P. Diddy's "Vote or Die" posse after him at one point.

He is eventually forced to vote, but circumstances change, rendering the whole election unnecessary.

Whew. In one half-hour cartoon, Parker and Stone manage to voice their displeasure with George W. Bush and John Kerry, show the inherent flaws of voter turn-out campaigns and make fun of self-aggrandizing rappers like P. Diddy. They even squeeze in some pot shots at PETA for good measure.

Most impressively, "South Park" did all this in one episode and still managed to be hilarious. How many New York Times editorials can say that?

Entertaining people and commenting intelligently on modern society aren't mutually exclusive. It's possible to do both, and "South Park" does it better than anything I know.

And as for the students of the future? I think they'll be watching "South Park" in their history classrooms.

From important social issues to the stupid things we find funny, nothing else paints a more accurate picture of modern society.

Regulating blogs violates free speech rights

JONAS HOGG

On December 15, 1791, the most progressive document concerning the inviolability of the individual, the United States Constitution, was amended for the first time. The first amendment states, "Congress shall make no law...abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble."

There is a very good and very real reason why this was the First Amendment and not the fourth or the eighth or 93rd. When the freedom to speak your mind and voice your opinions and concerns about the government is revoked, all other freedoms become mere illusions.

But in the approaching days, the Federal Election Commission is preparing to drop its pants and lay a hefty log on the freedom of speech enshrined in the First Amendment by including web logs (blogs) in the already insulting Campaign Finance Reform Act.

For those stuck in the '90s, the blog has become the soapbox of modern times. Everything from video games to fashion to dog grooming has hundreds if not thousands of blogs. Concurrently, we dirty Americans like to muck about in the big P – politics, that is. So it seemed common sense that in the politically charged atmosphere of the last election, tons of people would hop on their e-soapboxes to let their opinions be heard.

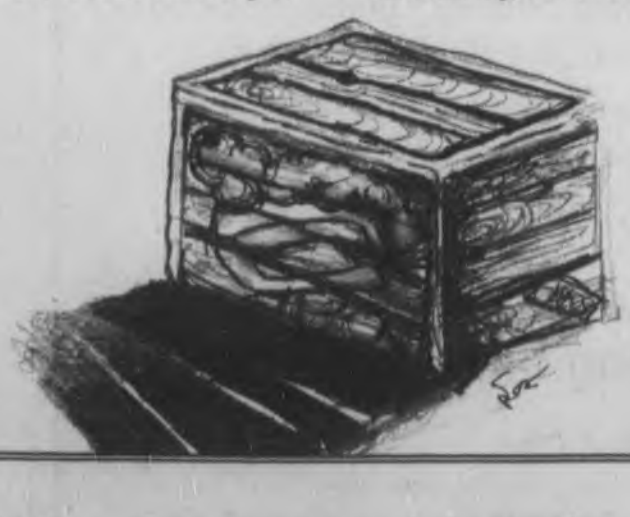
For several months before (and weeks after) the election, it was practically impossible to throw an e-stone without hitting a pro- or anti-Bush or Kerry Web site. Some of these blogs ranged from intelligent discussions about the merits (or lack thereof) of candidate X, while others devoted themselves to unintelligent name calling and badgering.

No one ever said democracy was pretty.

But now, the FEC wants to pass laws about what people can and cannot say on their blogs. Since the FEC itself is an unconstitutional organization, should we be surprised about the unconstitutional laws it seeks to pass?

Recently, Declan McCullagh on CNET (itself an online news source) reported on the poppycock of this new reform. Since the crux of the "reform" is finance, the FEC has set about trying to denote how much electricity and computer usage went into political advocacy, and how much value to place on links to other Web sites and e-mail addresses.

As an added bonus, the regulations could encompass mailing lists as well. I hope you College Republicans and Young Democrats are ready.



Unfortunately, this bit of freedom erosion by-and-large goes unnoticed by most. The news giants are too worried about who Jacko has been sleeping with and how many vegetables it takes to get a law through Congress (one; and by the way, when was the last time your congressman put a bill through especially for you?).

The true idiocy of these laws is that blogs are personal. They owe allegiance to no journalistic standards. The writers are folks sitting around in their underwear enjoying the unparalleled freedom of speech that the age of information has brought us.

They rant, they rave, they cajole; and more people are tuning out the increasingly irrelevant media giants in favor of their blog of choice.

But the government is intent on regulating the soapbox of the modern era. Let's not call it anything other than what it is: censorship.

There is a quote of unknown origin that states, "We have four boxes used to guarantee our liberty: the soap box, the ballot box, the jury box and the cartridge box." Let us hope that the government will not meddle with the first and cause us to need the fourth.

Pier One, Arby's open new stores

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Retail developments are going up all over Manhattan.

Pier One Imports moved to its new location and Famous Dave's Barbecue opened in early February and are located in Seth Child Commons, which also includes Target.

Ron Fehr, city manager, said the area opened up for development, and people are looking for different spaces to develop.

"Any time you have a major retail like Target, you are going to have additional developments in conjunction to that," Fehr said.

A new Arby's restaurant is under construction in Seth Child Commons. Fehr said there is also speculative retail space near Panera Bread.

The owners of the strip mall south of Wal-Mart have not officially announced what is going in, he said.

"There have been rumors of what may go in there, but nothing official," Fehr said.

The owners of the two strip centers east of Wal-Mart on Hayes Drive also have not officially announced their plans.

Additionally, new retail space is located at Ft. Riley Boulevard and Juliette Street.

Lyle Butler, president of Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, said the developments serve two purposes.

The relocation allows people to stay in Manhattan without having to go to another community and providing variety, Butler said. New developments also attract people from surrounding communities.

"Manhattan is becoming more of a regional shopping center and entertainment center," Butler said.

Butler said the variety in developments helps Manhattan attract other companies.

"If you look back at over the past three years, Manhattan has added a half million square feet in retail space," he said. "That is a huge amount for a community of this size."

Butler said there are no large plans for 2005, but a downtown redevelopment project has been in the works for three years.

Construction related to the project is to start late 2005 or early 2006. It will take about five years to complete.

The project is to include new retail, hotels, entertainment opportunities, restaurants and housing.

"This is a huge project for Manhattan," Butler said.

Fehr said Manhattan's size and K-State bring more developments to Manhattan.

"More national chains are becoming interested in our community," he said. "This happens as you become closer to a 50,000 population and also in a university community."

Gadzooks closing; Buckle moving to new location

By Cynthia Hoffman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Bright red "store closing" sale signs line the Gadzooks display shelves and windows, and other changes are taking place at Manhattan Town Center.

Gadzooks clothing store in the mall is closing and initiating a liquidation process.

"The store is closing because it was bought out by the Forever 21 clothing store company," Gadzooks Assistant Manager Jenn Hofstetter said. "The liquidation process has begun, and everything will be on sale until it's gone."

Currently all merchandise in the store is at least 30 percent off the original price, and Hofstetter said prices could continue to decrease.

"As time goes on, prices will drop until everything is gone," she said, "but right now the products are selling really well, so it will be a while before that happens."

Allen Raynor, Manhattan Town Center general manager, said Gadzooks had not issued an official closing notification to the mall administration, so he was surprised when the sale signs first appeared March 14.

He said a year ago, Gadzooks was having financial problems nationwide, but he thought the store's problems would be fixed after rent was reduced and some other terms of its lease were changed.

"We thought Gadzooks was in trouble last year when the national corporation went bankrupt," Raynor said. "At that point, concessions were made to allow the store to stay open, get organized and come out of bankruptcy, but apparently it didn't work."

Some of the Gadzooks employees were just as surprised as Raynor. Diane Molstad, assistant manager at Gadzooks, attended K-State for two and a half years, and then decided to take a break, work and earn some money. She has only been working at the store for two months and was not anticipating its closing.

"It came as a shock because I never thought we would close, so I never explored any other job options," she said. "Now I'm kind of stuck in a stressful situation trying to find a full-time job on such short notice."

Hofstetter graduated from K-State in 2003 with a degree in apparel marketing and design and said Gadzooks was a good place to use her education. Hofstetter said there are four other employees who are planning to pursue an apparel marketing degree, and she said she wished they could have attained the same experience that was available to her.

"I've appreciated the management experience I've gained, but I'm ready for bigger and better things," Hofstetter said. "The employees who work here have such a pride in the store, and I'm disappointed that they won't get the experience."

The only two Gadzooks stores remaining in Kansas are located in Oak Park Mall in Overland Park, Kan. and in Towne East Square in Wichita.

Manhattan resident Alicia Cassidy said she was a regular shopper at Gadzooks and was enjoying the sales but wasn't happy about the store closing.

"I'm a faithful Gadzooks shopper, and I buy a lot of my clothes there, because it's one of the only stores in this location that fits my style," she said.

Jenny Curoe, senior in family studies and human services, said although she doesn't buy a lot of her clothing from Gadzooks, the store will be missed because there's not another like it.

"Gadzooks has its own unique style," Curoe said. "The Buckle has some things that are kind of funky, but it's not as alternative."

The Buckle is also undergoing changes. The Buckle will be moving to the area west of the present location of Gadzooks during Memorial Day weekend.

Cindy Kulp, manager of the Buckle, said the store's 10-year lease was up, and it was time to remodel. She said the new location will be a better shape for the new store design.

"We are very excited about the new presentation of our store, because the design is more customer friendly," Kulp said. "It will be the same Buckle for people who are already established consumers, but hopefully we'll attract new consumers as well."

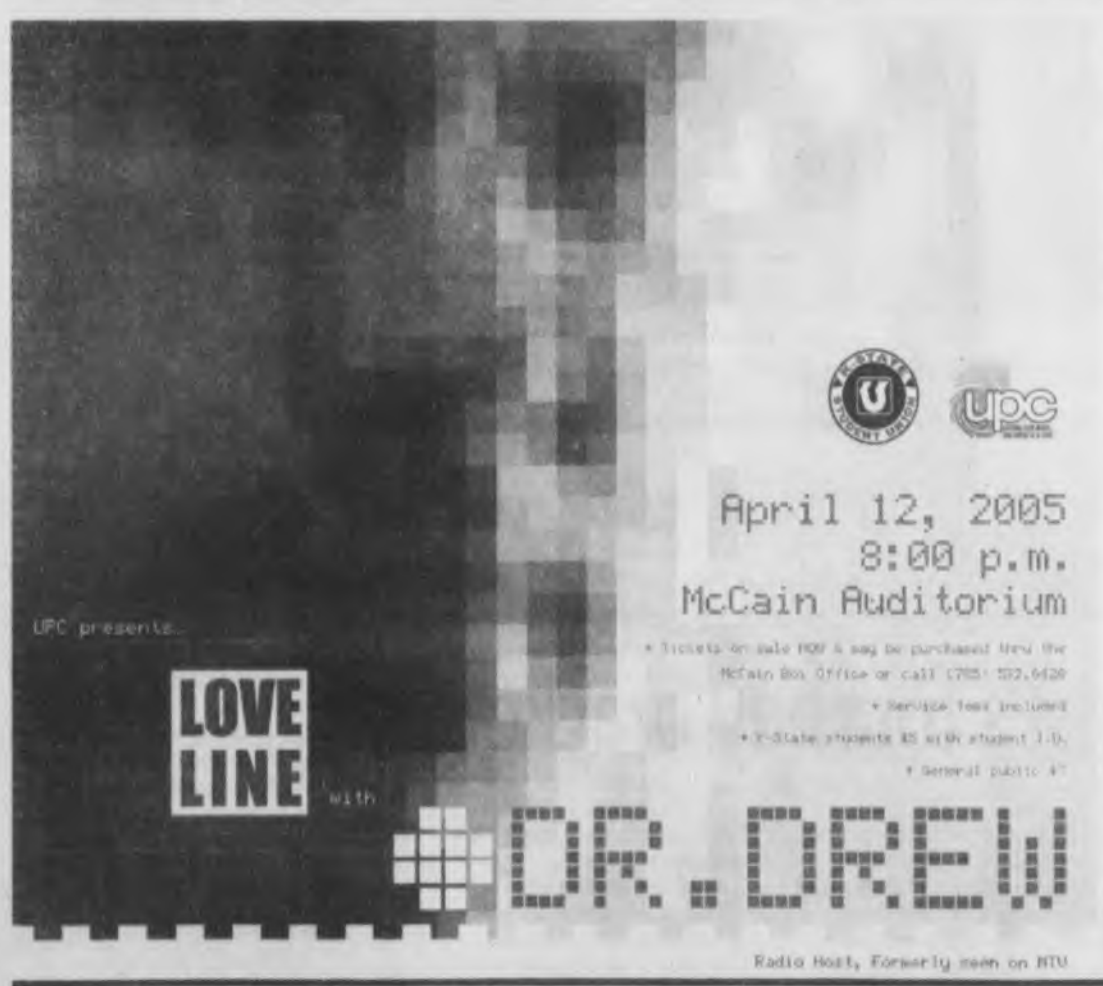
The new store design includes more display tables, a center counter and extended room for the shoe business.

Kulp said she thinks the new design will be effective in attracting consumers.

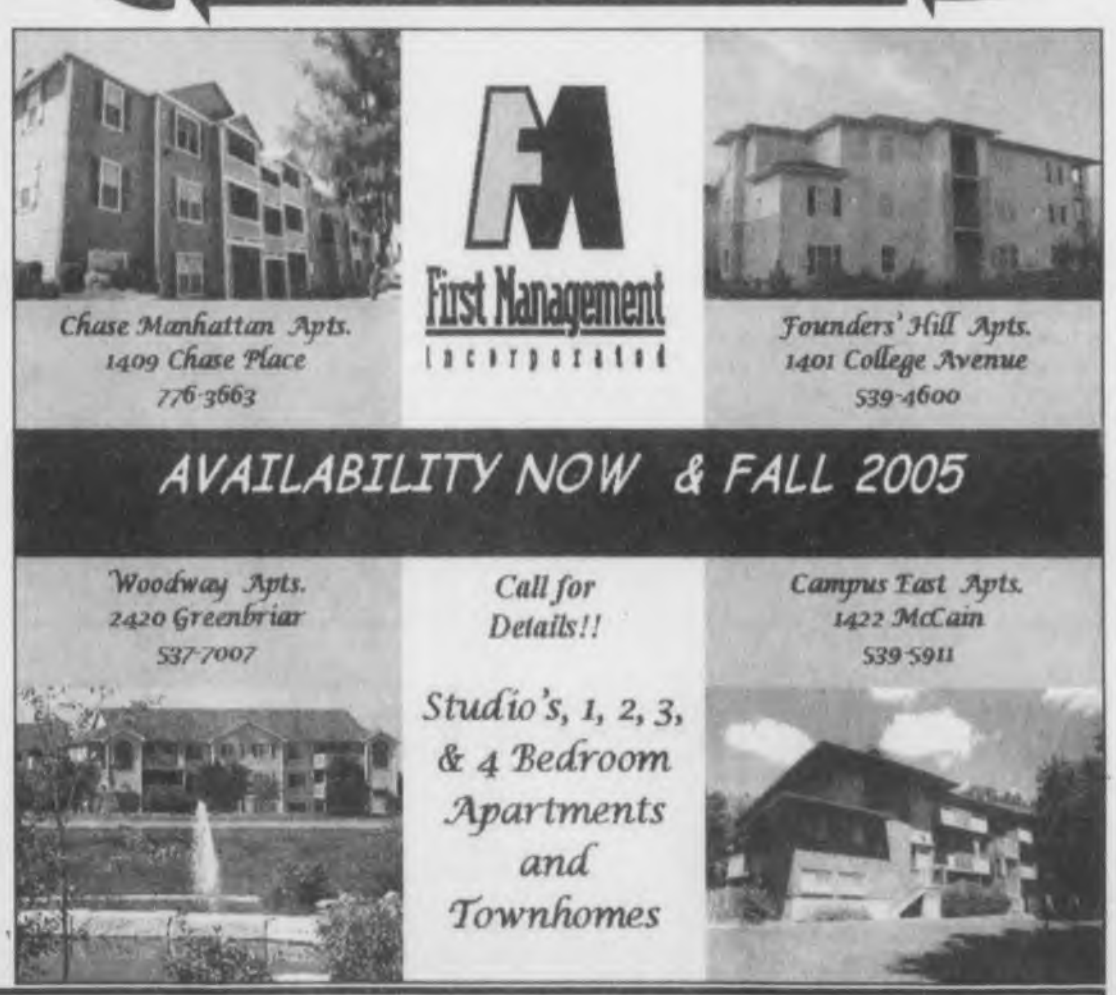
"The new store look is more appealing and will feel a lot more open and spacious," she said. "The tables are more self-shoppable, and they allow visualization of the outfit and display more details of the finished product."

Raynor said there is a process the administration completes in order to find the right tenants for the Manhattan Town Center.

Raynor said he couldn't release any specifics, but a new store would be located and ready to begin construction right after the Buckle moves out.



"We have individuals in our company who work with national chain stores," he said.



"We also conduct research and surveys to try to maintain an appropriate mix of tenants that meet our consumers' desires and wants."

Chesang automatically qualifies for nationals

By Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Matthew Chesang and the Wildcat distance runners led K-State's split track and field squad Friday and Saturday.

The Wildcat distance runners competed at the Stanford Invitational on Friday in Palo Alto, Calif., and the rest of the team traveled to the Arizona State Invitational on Saturday in Tempe, Ariz.

Chesang, a senior from Eldama Revine, Kenya, set a school record in the 10,000-meter run with his NCAA Outdoor Championships automatic qualifying time of 28 minutes, 35.48 seconds.

The 2004 NCAA Cross Country All-American finished fifth in his section of the race.

Senior Trisha Culbertson led the Wildcat women distance runners with a fifth place finish in her section of the 10,000. Her time of 35:24.59 seconds was just shy of NCAA provisional qualifying status.

No Wildcat athlete won an event at the Stanford Invitational, but K-State captured six event titles and seven Wildcats qualified for the Midwest Regional Championships at the Arizona State Invitational.

Wildcats swept over by Tigers

K-State drops weekend series in Big12 Conference home opener

By Nathan Ryerson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Wildcats were on the wrong end of a series sweep this weekend against the Missouri Tigers.

K-State (13-10, 1-5) was swept by Missouri (20-4, 3-0) in three games at Tointon Family Stadium, which kicked off the Wildcats' Big 12 home schedule.

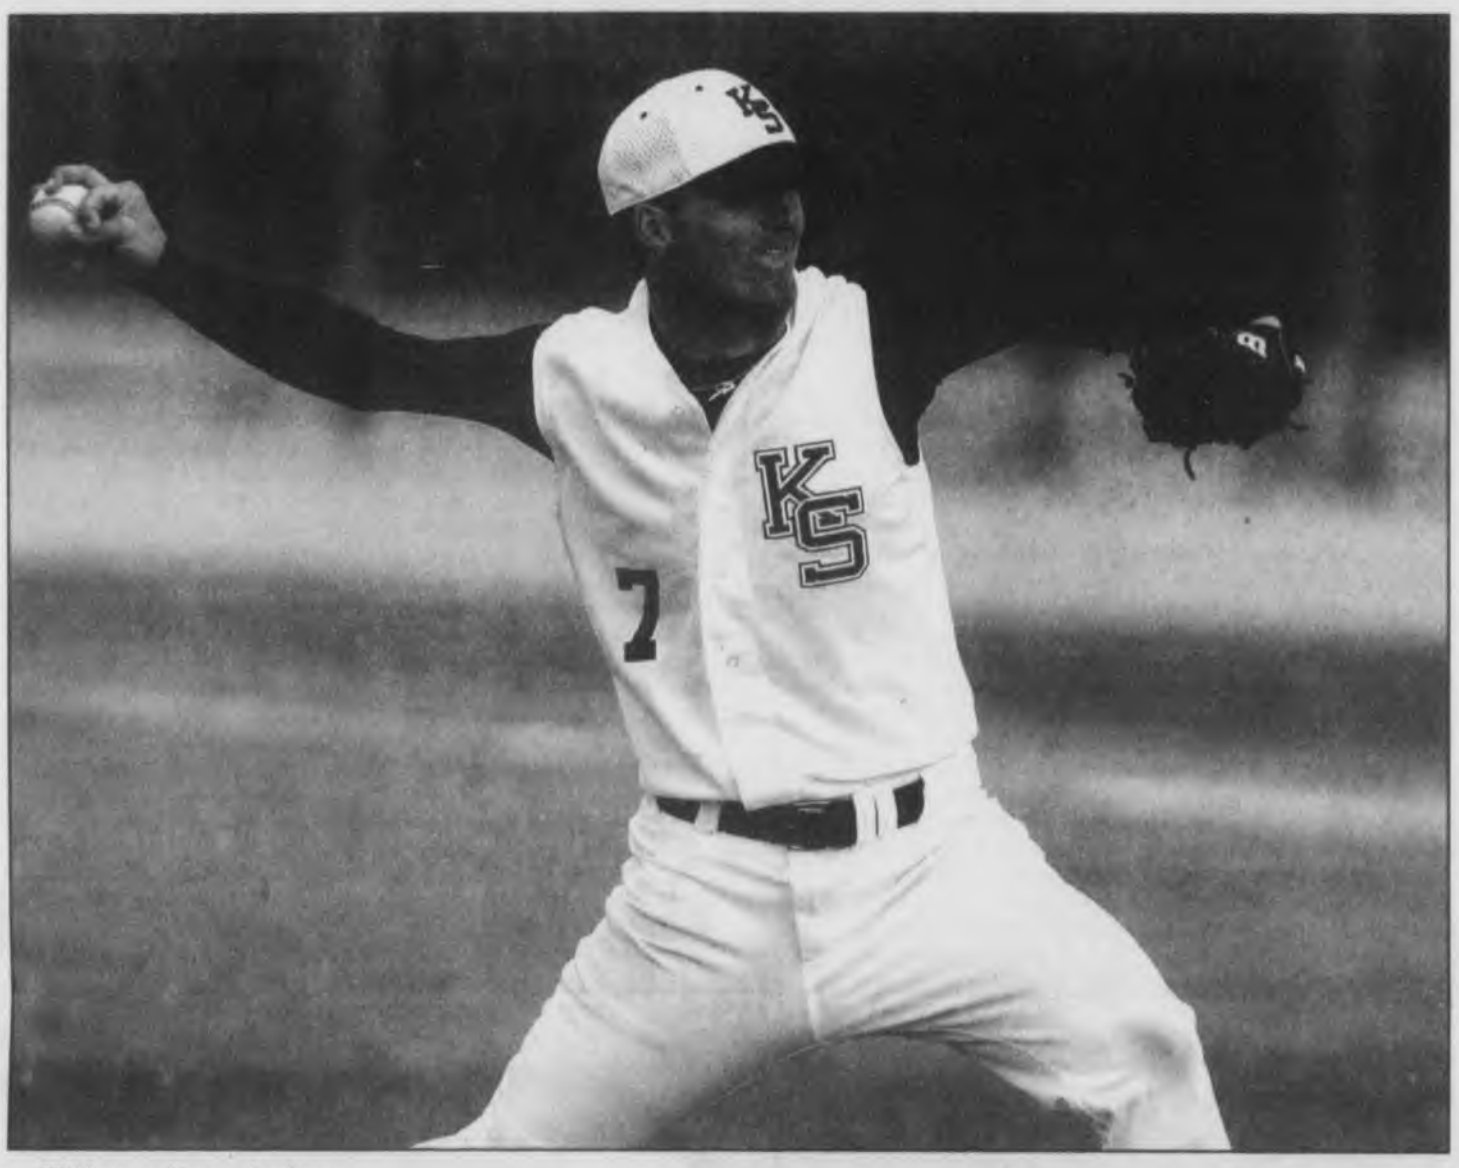
Friday night was highlighted by costly Wildcat errors that gave Missouri a 3-1 victory.

Three Wildcat pitchers held Missouri to just three hits, but four errors resulted in three unearned runs for the Tigers.

"There are definitely some things the guys still need to work on," Coach Brad Hill said following Friday's game. "It wasn't very pretty. The errors were pretty much the ballgame."

Junior Chase Mitchell started the game on the mound for the Wildcats, giving up no earned runs on three hits, while throwing a career-high seven strikeouts.

"I had some good starts, but I gave up too many walks," Mitchell said. "I wish we could have won this one."



K-State started the game with an RBI single by junior Eric Durante, scoring senior Terry Blunt, which tied the game at one run a piece.

However, K-State failed to score again in the game, and Missouri picked up the win.

On Saturday, the Wildcats rallied late, but came up short in the bottom of the ninth, giving the Tigers a 6-5 victory.

K-State took a 5-4 lead in the bottom of the seventh, but Missouri followed with a two-run top of the eighth, giving the Tigers a 6-4 advantage.

The bottom of the ninth ended with a snagged line-drive by the Tiger third baseman off of junior Joe Roundy, ending the game.

Wildcat reliever freshman Daniel Edwards (0-2) suffered the loss after surrendering two runs in the top of the eighth inning.

Easter Sunday did not favor the Wildcats any better, as they fell to the Tigers for the third time on the weekend with a final score of 3-2.

The Wildcats were down once again going into the bottom of the ninth and got a rally going that fell short, leaving the tying runner on base.

"We were more in tune today," Hill said after Sunday's loss. "We need to be more focused at bat earlier in the game."

Junior Adam Cowart (5-1) picked up his first loss on the season. Cowart gave up three runs on eight hits in 8.0 innings. He struck out two and walked one.

"He did a great job," Hill said.

March Madness not kind to columnist's tourney brackets

JOSH WITT

You've got to love March Madness, but it's been a rough couple of weeks for Wildcat and Big 12 basketball fans.

It started with K-State getting left out of the men's National Invitation Tournament. More than two weeks later, I still don't know what the thought process was in leaving the Wildcats out.

K-State's snub should have been a sign of what was to come, but I remained optimistic. I thought this was going to be the year my NCAA Tournament bracket would dominate, the Big 12 Conference would once again take two teams to the Final Four and the K-State women would make it past the Sweet Sixteen.

Wrong, wrong and wrong again.

My Final Four picks were Kansas, Oklahoma State, Georgia Tech and Duke.

Needless to say, I've locked down the next-to-last spot in both of the online pools I'm in.

Good times.

That brings us to the Big 12's performance in the NCAA Tournament – pretty disappointing.

Though it might have brought joy to the city of Manhattan, nobody can honestly say they saw Bucknell knocking off Big 12 co-champion Kansas in round one.

Texas' loss in the first round and Iowa State's in the second were to be expected, but co-champ Oklahoma's second-round defeat at the hands of Utah did not make the Big 12 look too hot.

It's hard to promote your conference as one of the best in the country when your co-champions can't make it past the first weekend.

Texas Tech was the lone Big 12 team to exceed expectations by making the Sweet Sixteen. Coach Bob Knight showed he's still got some game left, and his team would have gone further if not for running into the unstoppable buzzsaw that was Kevin Pittsnogle – "The Snogle" - and the West Virginia Mountaineers.

Oklahoma State didn't have the best luck either, having to play an on-fire Arizona team in the regional semifinal. Oklahoma State, Arizona, and Illinois all deserved to be in the Final Four, and it was a shame only one could advance.

Rounding out a less-than-stellar March Madness for Wildcat fans was the K-State women's team's loss to Vanderbilt in the second round of the NCAA Tournament.

What a shame that Kendra Wecker and that outstanding senior class will leave without ever making it past the Sweet Sixteen.

We can debate all day why the Wildcats were knocked off in the second round for the third straight year, but one thing is for sure – something's up when you have the best three-point shooter in the history of the women's college game in Laurie Koehn and a first-team All-American in Wecker and you can't make it farther than the second round.

But I'm going to stay optimistic.

Yes, our women might struggle next year, but there is another heralded class of freshmen arriving. If Claire Coggins steps up and becomes a leader, K-State should return to the NCAA Tournament.

And the men's team?

The Wildcats will return one of the most-talented backcourts in the conference with Fred Peete, Clent Stewart, Lance Harris, Cartier Martin and Curtis Allen.

If Tyler Hughes can step his play up, and if one of Coach Jim Wooldridge's recruits at the post position pans out, the Wildcats will win eight conference games and make the NCAA Tournament.

It'll be tough, though, because the Big 12 will be quite recovered from this year's poor NCAA showing.

Oklahoma returns all its key contributors, Texas should get P.J. Tucker back, and Iowa State and Texas A&M will be just as good, if

MLB | Bonds continues knee rehab without crutches

As his rehabilitation sessions for his surgically repaired right knee continue in San Francisco, Barry Bonds no longer needs the aid of crutches.

Bonds is working out daily at SBC Park, mostly on range of motion exercises. While this is positive news for the Giants, Bonds still has no timetable in place to start baseball activities.

Bonds

Bonds returned to the Bay Area on Thursday to continue rehabbing his knee because the Giants believe SBC Park is better suited for him than the team's Arizona spring complex.

Last Tuesday, the seven-time NL MVP said he might miss half or all of this season while recovering from surgery, though the Giants are hoping he'll come back sooner.

CFB | ASU running back charged with murder

TEMPE, Ariz. — Arizona State running back Loren Wade was arrested Saturday on suspicion of first-degree murder in the shooting death of a former ASU football player.

Police said Brandon Falkner, 25, of Tempe was shot in the head about 2:30 a.m. Saturday as he sat in his car outside Club CBNC, a Scottsdale nightspot.

Wade

Scottsdale police detective Sam Bailey said Falkner and Wade exchanged words before the shot was fired.

Bailey said Wade saw her standing next to Falkner's car, got out of his car, exchanged words with Falkner and fired once.

Falkner tried to drive away, but crashed into another car, then hit a tree. He was pronounced dead at Scottsdale Healthcare Osborn.

ALBUQUERQUE, New Mexico — New Mexico State has landed a coach that is headed to the Final Four.

Reggie Theus, an assistant to Rick Pitino at Louisville for the last two years, confirmed that he has accepted the coaching job at New Mexico State.

Theus

The school has scheduled a news conference for Monday.

Theus, 47, joined Pitino's staff in 2003. He previously served as coach of the Las Vegas Storm of the American Basketball Association during the 2002 season.

The 'Law and Order' generation

Series has been on TV the past 15 years, still going strong

By Mike Postiglione
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Even if you only watch a small amount of television, you have probably heard of the gripping crime drama "Law and Order."

The brainchild of creator and executive producer Dick Wolf, "Law and Order" has now been on television for 15 years. Its successes have resulted in three spin-off shows, combining for a total of more than 540 episodes.

Its popularity is becoming increasingly apparent. According to National Public Radio, during the first full week of March 2005, 12 out of NBC's 22 weekly prime-time hours consisted of "Law and Order"-related television. And, according to the Nielsen television ratings for the week of March 7-13, 2005, "Law and Order" shows occupied three of the top 20 spots, with a total of 28.4 million viewers tuning in to those three episodes alone. There are also a number of "Law and Order" books and computer games now available in stores.

It is reasonable to wonder what makes this show so well-liked.

For one, the premise is simple. Wolf once explained it well by saying, "The first half is murder mystery. The second half is moral mystery."

The basic plot of every episode consists of two parts. The first half deals with the discovery of a body and the detectives tracking down the suspect.

Then, during the second half, the lawyers prosecute the offender, and a trial takes place. At the end, a verdict is handed down. Seemingly straightforward, the genius of the show comes into play with every twist and turn that the writers introduce.

During an interview with National Public Radio in 2003, Dick Wolf explained how "Law and Order" differed from other hour-long television dramas.

One reason, Wolf said, was that every episode has a story-driven plot.

"People have a fascination with watching other people work," Wolf said. "In 'Law and Order,' the (characters') private lives stay private." This way, the writers can stay focused on the story at hand.

Another way the show keeps people interested is its quickened pace.

"The average one-hour show has 26 scenes," Wolf said. "In an average episode of 'Law and Order,' there are between 40 and 42 scenes. This affects the pacing and the scene structure of the show."

The show also showcases some of the best acting on television. From the gruff-but-witty Detective Lenny Briscoe (played by Jerry Orbach, who passed away last November) on "Law and Order," to the no-nonsense intensity of Detective Elliot Stabler (played by Christopher Meloni) on "Law and Order: Special Victims Unit," every actor does a fine job of portraying his or her role.

Each of the four shows has a slightly different approach to the same basic formula. "Law and Order," the original series that premiered in 1990, usually deals with the crime of homicide.

"Law and Order: Special Victims Unit," which began in 1999, deals with sexual crimes, such as rape and incest.

"Law and Order: Criminal Intent" takes a different perspective. Originating in 2001, it takes the viewer into the mind of the criminal, while the detectives take a more psychological approach to solving the crime.

In the newest of the series, "Law and Order: Trial by Jury," which debuted only three weeks ago, the story is told not only from the perspective of the detectives and prosecutors, but from those of the defense attorneys and jurors as well.

In the end, I suggest you check out at least one of the four "Law and Order" shows now on television.

Though, I must forewarn you of a possible addiction that may develop. It has happened to me, as is evidenced by my cell phone's "Law and Order" ring tone.

CELEB NEWS

'Guess Who' debuts as top movie with $21 million

The Bernie Mac and Ashton Kutcher comedy "Guess Who," an update to the 1967 classic "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner," debuted at No. 1 with $21 million, according to studio estimates Sunday.

Kutcher

Sandra Bullock's sequel, "Miss Congeniality 2: Armed and Fabulous," opened in second place with $14.5 million for Friday to Sunday. That brought the movie's total to $17.6 million since it opened Thursday to get a head start on Easter weekend. The previous weekend's top flick, "The Ring 2," slipped to third with $13.8 million.

Mac

It was a solid but unremarkable Easter weekend, generally a slow time at theaters because families are preoccupied with holiday gatherings. The top 12 movies took in $90.1 million, off 7 percent from Easter weekend last year, when "The Passion of the Christ" was No. 1. "They're clinging to the wreckage of their lives rather than being out there and in the moment," "AbFab" producer Jon Plowman said of the two main characters.

Ban on Emmy-nominated tapes anger news media

Imagine if a few months before the Academy Awards, all the best picture nominees were pulled from the theaters. They weren't available on DVD, television or cable on demand. Nothing. The pre-Oscar buzz would shrivel, and none of the Oscar pools and predictions could get off the ground. A comparable situation exists on a much smaller scale at the Daytime Emmy Awards.

Journalists are complaining that access to tapes of Emmy-nominated performances has been shut off, and the National Television Academy won't even let them know which specific episodes are being judged.

"This is a media organization banning the media from seeing what they do when they bestow a media award," said Tom O'Neil, who runs the Web site Goldderby.com, a repository for news, gossip and predictions for entertainment awards shows.

The head of the committee that instituted the ban conceded it was done because some academy members were annoyed at previous years' stories written about the awards, but characterized the decision as innocuous. Few people besides O'Neil care, said David Ashbrock, chairman of the awards committee.

Suspenseful mystery novel keeps readers' attention

"The Lake of Dead Languages"
Book review by Brigette Burandt

Much of the time these days, mystery novels really aren't much of a mystery. Some plots are so obvious it just isn't any fun reading the book.

That isn't the case with Carol Goodman's national bestseller, "The Lake of Dead Languages." You'll be kept on the edge of your seat with the plot twists and intriguing hints, always questioning what you think has happened.

I discovered the book by a fluke, surfing around on Amazon.com in the cheap books section. The description sounded interesting, so I decided to add it to my cart to get the Free Super Saver shipping.

I didn't expect too much from this book, but Goodman's fluid writing grabbed my attention right from the start. It begins with the story of a woman, recently separated from her husband, who takes a job as a Latin teacher at her old school.

It isn't long, though, before you become immersed in intrigue as events from the past begin to repeat themselves, and the only person who can find out why is Jane Hudson.

In her senior year at Heart Lake School for Girls in the Adirondack Mountains, three students committed suicide. The only one left to carry the burden of the secrets surrounding the deaths, Jane tried to flee her past only to return 20 years later.

Not long after she arrives, pages from her old journal reappear, and forgotten memories return to the surface.

Then young, troubled girls begin to die, and Jane is forced to remember a past she has striven to forget.

You'll be absorbed by this book as Goodman reveals details gradually, so you never guess what will happen next. This story has everything: action, sex, drugs, murder – even incest. I have to say that this is one of the best books I've read, and I'm a picky reader, so I'm sure you'll enjoy it, too.

So next time you're looking for a good mystery, check out Carol Goodman's "The Lake of Dead Languages." You won't regret it.

Dave's provides excellent atmosphere, good eating

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There aren't too many people I know who hate barbecue. Even my vegetarian friends are eager to sit outside, grill Boca burgers, and chew the fat (figuratively, of course). Manhattan residents now have a new home for barbecue: Famous Dave's Legendary Pit Bar-B-Que, located at 910 Commons Place, directly behind Target.

Approaching Famous Dave's from Highway 18 immediately sets the mood for the kind of dining experience this restaurant offers. The decor of Famous Dave's is very similar to many bar-and-grill restaurants such as Applebee's Grill & Bar and Chili's Grill & Bar. Pictures, awards and other random crap adorn the walls. The difference between Famous Dave's and these other restaurants is that Dave obviously had a sense of humor when choosing items to place on the wall. Famous pictures are altered by putting Dave's head on people in the pictures (my personal favorite is Dave shaking Einstein's hand).

The wait staff at Famous Dave's is very friendly and attentive, even with a busy Friday night crowd.

Famous Dave's menu isn't very different from other barbecue-themed restaurants.

Grading scale
Food Quality: A-Atmosphere: A Location: B-
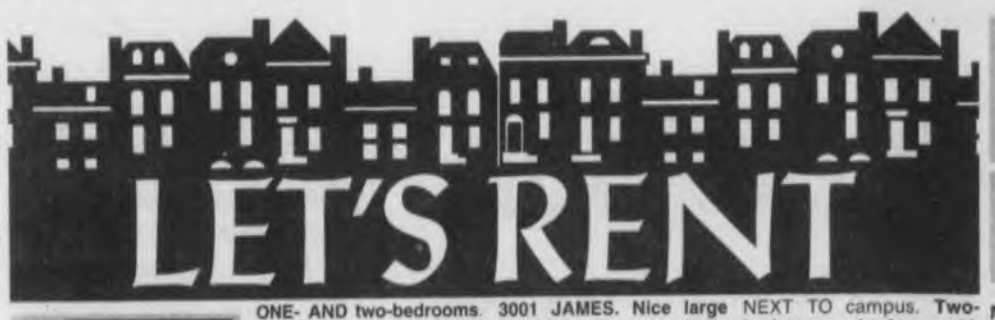
Price: B
Overall: B+



The menu consists of a few salads and appetizers, barbecued meat, sandwiches and, of course, ribs. I ordered sweetwater catfish, with which I was slightly disappointed (my fault for ordering fish sticks at a barbeque restaurant), but the rib tips that I sampled were amazing: meaty and smothered in sauce.

What was most impressive was the quality and variety of side items available with the meal. The fries are unusually cut and seasoned. The corn bread muffin was hot and sweet, probably my favorite part of the meal. The coleslaw and potato salad were also exceptional.

The only thing that I can count against Famous Dave's is the prices. The restaurant is not very economically priced, with most entrees averaging around $10 each.

My experience with Famous Dave's was very satisfying. The friendly employees, delicious food and unique atmosphere combine to create a very pleasurable dining experience (For those on the run, Famous Dave's also offers a To Go menu).

Iraqi officials summoned for 2nd session

By Mariam Fam
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq – Al-Qaeda in Iraq released a video Sunday claiming to show the murder of an Interior Ministry official, while debate raged about religion's place in Iraq's much-anticipated new government as lawmakers were summoned to their second session.

As frustration grows over the slow progress in forming a new government two months after historic elections, guards fired on government workers demanding their wages in Baghdad, injuring three people.

Supporters of interim Prime Minister Ayad Allawi criticized the involvement of the religious authority in politics, while Abdel-Aziz al-Hakim, leader of the Shiite-led United Iraqi Alliance, defended the role of the clergy.

"As long as we're alive and as long as Iraq and the believers are there, we will continue to work according to the directions and the advice of the religious authority," al-Hakim told the U.S.-funded Alhurra TV station, according to a transcript provided by his office.

"The religious authority does not want to intervene in the details," he added. "It just gives direction when it thinks it will be beneficial."

Secular-minded politicians have expressed concern about the influence of religion in the National Assembly in which the Shiite-led United Iraqi Alliance holds 140 of the 275 seats.

In a letter to the alliance, politicians who ran under an Allawi coalition warned that allowing religion to play a greater role in Iraq's government could "lead to instability in the relations between political forces in the Iraqi arena."

Shiite leaders repeatedly have denied they are seeking an Islamic state like that of neighboring Iran, saying they plan to include Kurdish and Sunni Arabs in the government.

Shiites make up about 60 percent of Iraq's 26 million people, while Sunni Arabs account for about 20 percent. Kurds, who are Sunni Muslims but mostly secular, are 15 percent to 20 percent of the population.

The top U.N. envoy in Iraq, Ashraf Qazi, said Grand Ayatollah Ali al-Sistani told him during a meeting Sunday in Najaf that the Shiite spiritual leader did not intend to involve himself in any political process, except for expressing his opinion during crises. The alliance came together under al-Sistani's guidance.

The National Assembly was expected to have its second session on Tuesday to choose a parliament speaker and two deputies, but it was not known if they would name the country's new president, expected to be Kurdish leader Jalal Talabani. The president will be responsible for nominating a prime minister, expected to be the alliance's Ibrahim al-Jaafari.

The first session, on March 16, was to swear in the parliament. But officials have pushed back their second session amid negotiations over Cabinet posts.

In a meeting Sunday, Alliance members named former nuclear scientist Hussain al-Shahristani as their candidate to be a deputy to the parliament speaker, negotiator Ali al-Dabagh said, adding they were to choose a candidate for the president's deputy position on Monday.

Al-Hakim acknowledged the lack of progress was creating frustration, saying, "We are not comfortable with this delay, and we are sorry about it."

But he said the process was not easy because of the desire "to have everyone participate and to have a national unity government."

Schiavo spends 9th day without food, water

By Mike Schneider
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PINELLAS PARK, Fla. – With their hopes of a miracle fading and other options exhausted, Terri Schiavo's parents and siblings appeared quietly resigned Sunday and asked protesters to spend Easter with their families as the severely brain-damaged woman spent a ninth day without food and water.

Those outside the hospice where Terri Schiavo is being cared for were not as calm, with the first of what would be four morning arrests coming as ministers attempted to bring Terri Schiavo Easter communion.

About a half-dozen people in wheelchairs later got out of them and lay in the driveway, shouting "We're not dead yet!"

Police protecting the hospice were loudly heckled, prompting Terri Schiavo's brother, Bobby Schindler, to come out and ask the protesters to tone down their behavior.

"We are not going to solve the problem today by getting arrested," he told the restless crowd of about three dozen people.

"We can change laws, but we are not going to change them today. ... You are not speaking for our family."

A spokesman for the Schindlers denied a report from David Gibbs III, their lead lawyer, who told CBS' "Face the Nation" Sunday that Terri Schiavo has "passed where physically she would be able to recover."

That statement "was not made with the family's knowledge. In the family's opinion, that is absolutely not true," family spokesman Randall Terry told reporters.

George Felos, an attorney for her husband Michael Schiavo, did not return a call for comment.

The two sides, who have battled for years over whether the 41-year-old wanted to live or die, have given differing opinions of her status.

Her parents have said she is declining rapidly and in her last hours; Felos argued Saturday that her condition is not yet that grave.

Doctors have said Terri Schiavo would probably die within a week or two of the tube being removed March 18.

She relied on the tube for 15 years after suffering catastrophic brain damage when her heart stopped beating and oxygen was cut off to her brain.

Terri Schiavo's parents, Bob and Mary Schindler, have maintained their daughter is not in a persistent vegetative state as court-ordered doctors have determined.

Michael Schiavo has said his wife told him that she would not want to be kept alive artificially.

The Schindlers said they would stop asking courts to intervene after the Florida Supreme Court rejected their most recent appeal Saturday.

The parents were rebuffed repeatedly by federal courts after Congress passed an extraordinary law last weekend allowing the case to be heard by federal judges.

Pope unable to speak at Easter blessing, to attend Sunday mass

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

VATICAN CITY– Pope John Paul II delivered an Easter Sunday blessing to tens of thousands of people in St. Peter's Square, but the ailing pontiff was unable to speak and managed only to greet the saddened crowd with a sign of the cross, bringing tears to many.

Aides had readied a microphone, and the pope tried to utter a few words from his studio window overlooking the square. But after making a few sounds, he just blessed the crowd with his hand and the microphone was taken away.

Vatican watchers had been anxiously awaiting John Paul's appearance for signs of how the 84-year-old pontiff was faring after Feb. 24 surgery to insert a tube in his throat to help him breathe. After the dramatic appearance, many in the crowd cried or applauded in sad appreciation for John Paul's pained efforts to greet them on the holiest day of the church calendar.

John Paul last spoke to the public March 13, shortly before he was discharged from the hospital.

A physician from Nice, France, Milou Drici, said he and others were saddened by what they saw – but also heartened.

"As a doctor, I felt for him," he said. "It is an ordeal for him and you could see his frustration." But he added: "You have to admire his strength and fortitude. The faith of the people, as you saw today, helps him overcome his difficulties."

For the first time since John Paul's papacy began in 1978, Easter Sunday Mass at the Vatican was celebrated without him as he continued his convalescence following two recent hospitalizations for breathing crises.

John Paul also suffers from Parkinson's disease, which makes it difficult for him to speak.

Jalissa Doughty, 11, gets an egg in each hand at the beginning of the 8- to 11-year-old Easter egg hunt. The event was sponsored by Morale Welfare Recreation, an organization that organizes sports, fitness and other recreation services for the soldiers at Fort Riley.

EASTER | Children search for more than 2,000 eggs during annual hunt

"Today the weather is great, so we could have even more," Scherberger said.

The hunt was divided into three parts, with each section being for different age groups. Each group started at a different time in order to allow for fair competition amongst the different ages. Children from toddlers to 11-year-olds participated.

Scherberger said that around 2,000 colored plastic eggs had been hidden around the grounds. Inside each egg was candy or a slip of paper that could be exchanged for a prize.

As 8-year-old Kierra Sherman waited for the 8- to-11 age group to begin its hunt, she spun in quick circles, long black hair flowing behind her twirling body. Sherman's smiling face and quick laugh never revealed the worries of a little girl whose father is currently in Iraq.

Cynthia Sherman, Fort Riley resident and Kierra's mother, said that her husband will be in Iraq for a year. The distance is hard on the Sherman family.

"Our family usually gets together on holidays, so it's strange not having him here," said Cynthia Sherman.

Cynthia Sherman said she has been spending extra time with her daughter and trying to keep Kierra busy with sports and other activities to keep her daughter's mind occupied.

"She knows that her daddy's in Iraq," Cynthia Sherman said.

"He told her before he left that 'daddy has to go fight for our country,' so she knows where he's at, and she prays for him every night."

For Kierra Sherman and most of the children, the Easter egg hunt was a success.

"We got lots of candy and eggs. I can put all of my candy with my M&Ms," said Kierra Sherman as she waited in line to jump in the Wapello, a giant orange inflatable room that proved the perfect place for kids to bounce off pre-hunt energy.

Before the start of the Easter egg hunt for children younger than 4 years old, children carrying large pastel baskets, decked out in dainty dresses or dapper suits, kicked off their shiny shoes to play in the Wapello.

Other children milled around the prize table, eyeing the array of toys that included hula hoops, Nerf balls, sidewalk chalk, coloring books, toy army men, bubbles, sets of bats and balls and even three bikes, one per age group.

Five-year-old Mackenzie Reeder said she could not wait for the hunt. She said she would love to win a bike even though she already has a bike.

"I have a bike, but it's a practice bike," Reeder said. "I want one with only two wheels."

Five-year-old Chaz Childers, a third-year veteran to the hunt, said he had his sights set on a giant water gun.

Scherberger said the point of the event was for the children and their families to have fun.

"Last year, there were lots of kids who would come with only one parent, because their other parent was overseas somewhere," Scherberger said. "I just hope this lets them forget about that for a bit and have a good time."

BASEBALL | K-State falls to 1-5

Cowart was critical of his pitching after the game, and he said he struggled early in the early innings.

"I didn't have my best control," Cowart said.

"I felt like I was overthrowing the ball in the first two innings. The loss hurts, but we need to stay focused."

Junior Brandon Farr and Roundy led the Wildcats on the day with two hits each. Roundy tied the game at 1-1 in the second with a solo home run over the right-field wall.

Roundy said the Missouri pitching was a difference-maker for the Tigers.

"The pitcher was tough out there," Roundy said.

"He had a good slider. Both my hits were on fastballs."

Blunt ended his 15-game hitting streak by going 0-3 on the day.

7 p.m. Tuesday night at Tointon Family Stadium K-state will play against the Wichita State Shockers.

TRACK | Team to compete in Texas

Wildcat 800-meter runners dominated the competition on both men and women's sides, as senior Lysaira Roman-Del Valle, junior Christian Smith and senior Erik Sproll qualified for the regional championships.

Roman-Del Valle, from San Lorenzo, Puerto Rico, won the women's 800 with a time of 2:05.83 seconds, which is the third fastest outdoor 800 in K-State history.

Smith and Sproll finished first and second in the men's 800 with times of 1:48.10 seconds and 1:49.53 seconds respectively.

Junior Kyle Lancaster, from Fort Scott, Kan., won the high jump for the Wildcats with a regional qualifying leap of 7-02 1/2. Lancaster has qualified for the Midwest Regional Championships each of the last three years.

Junior Breanna Eveland, a 2005 NCAA Indoor All-American, won the pole vault with a vault of 13-06 1/4. Eveland, who owns K-State's indoor record, now has her sights set on Erin Anderson's outdoor record of 13-09 1/4, which was set at the 2000 NCAA Outdoor Championships.

Sophomore Lindsay Grigoriev (discus) and redshirt freshman Laci Heller (hammer throw) also reached the regional qualifying standard in their respective events.

Sophomore Lisi Maurer (100-meter hurdles) and freshman Thomaida Polydorou (triple jump) rounded out the Wildcat event winners in Tempe.

K-State will compete in its next meet on April 2 in El Paso, Texas.

This March Madness has been a struggle, and Billy Packer is more annoying when things aren't going great for you, but I'm cheering up.

Next March, I'm betting and hoping fortunes turn around.

Riley County struggling with increase in underage tobacco sales

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Underage tobacco use is still a major problem in Riley County. Starla Bocanegra, program director for the Northwest Regional Prevention Center, said Riley County failed compliance checks of tobacco products in 2004.

"Our compliance was not horrible, but it was not good," she said. "No one really knows why the tobacco problem was larger this year."

Bocanegra said the Kansas Division of Alcoholic Beverage Control recently decided to impose an automatic $1,000 fine for retailers who sell tobacco to minors.

She said that the timing may be related to the high numbers this year since ABC does random checks.

"Also, Kansas is a more rural state, it tends to be more acceptable to smoke or chew tobacco in rural states," Bocanegra said.

She said a lack of awareness of how to limit the sale of tobacco to minors is a large part of the problem with underage tobacco use.

"In Manhattan, there are younger retail clerks who find it hard to have an authoritative position," she said. "They know the people that come in to ask for tobacco and do not know how to say no."

She said other problems are that some clerks do not know how to properly spot fake identification, and that staff turnover is quick, so retailers have a hard time keeping up on training.

"They know the people that come in to ask for tobacco and do not know how to say no."

Starla Bocanegra
PROGRAM DIRECTOR
NORTHWEST REGIONAL PREVENTION CENTER

The Regional Prevention Center recently came up with the Kansas Tobacco Retailer Training program. The program involves the RPC going to the retail site and training the staff for free in only an hour.

Bocanegra said the RPC sent letters out in January to retailers in Riley County, but no one has responded.

"We would be more than happy to help businesses and everyone in Riley County to help fight this problem," she said.

Sergeant Shuck, patrol sergeant for the Riley County Police Department, said underage use warrants a fine but not an arrest.

"Of course, it makes a difference on age, but the person will receive a citation and a fine of around $79," he said. "The cigarettes are then taken to evidence."

The police usually spot underage smokers in a random way. Sergeant Shuck said most have a tendency to hang around high schools and junior high schools.

Student wins Truman Scholarship

By Nathan Dorsett
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Victoria Luhrs, senior in secondary education and president of Mortar Board, the national senior honor society, found out she won the Truman Scholarship Monday.

She will receive $30,000 to help pay tuition for her senior year and graduate school.

After a long process of interviews and applications that began last February, Luhrs said she is going to defer the scholarship temporarily in order to teach middle school social studies for two years in the public school system.

"I chose to teach middle school because it gives teachers a chance to help high-risk students," Luhrs said.

She was one of four K-State students nominated for the Truman Scholarship, and one of 75 students chosen annually for the scholarship that is awarded to seniors interested in making a difference in the field of education and continuing their pursuits in graduate school.

Jim Hohenbary, scholarship adviser, is responsible for organizing the committee that decides which students are nominated at K-State.

"If you look at all the things she's been involved with, she has a strong potential to be an agent of change in the educational arena acting out her commitment to make a difference," Hohenbary said.

Indonesian earthquake kills hundreds

By Michael Casey
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A major earthquake struck late Monday off the west coast of Indonesia, and police said hundreds of people may have been killed in collapsed buildings. Thousands panicked in countries across the Indian Ocean as tsunami warnings were posted.

Fears of another catastrophe similar to December's devastating tsunami eased within hours, as officials in countries closest to the quake's epicenter said there were no reports of big waves striking their coasts after the temblor was reported.

Early reports of damage and casualties were confined to the island of Nias, off the Sumatran coast.

About 70 percent of houses and buildings in the market in the town of Gunungsitoli on the island had collapsed, said police Sgt. Zulkifli Sirait.

"We still cannot count the number of casualties or the number of collapsed buildings because it is dark here," Sirait said in a telephone interview. "It is possible that hundreds of people trapped in the collapsed buildings died."

The Indonesian government said the quake had "claimed several lives" on the island.

The U.S. Geological Survey said the quake, which occurred at 11:09 p.m. local time (10:09 a.m. CST), measured at 8.2. A later reading put the magnitude at 8.7, said Paul Earle, a USGS geophysicist.

Preliminary hearing for BTK suspect nears, defense to possibly change plea

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA – The suburban Wichita man accused of being the BTK serial killer might never stand trial for the deaths of 10 people over 17 years, a newspaper reported Sunday.

Sedgwick County public defender Steve Osburn told The Wichita Eagle that BTK suspect Dennis Rader will plead not guilty next month at his arraignment on 10 counts of first-degree murder, but "We may change that at some point before trial."

But Osburn, the lead defense lawyer in the case, added that it's still too early to make that call.

"That is ultimately Mr. Rader's decision," Osburn said. "At some point in the next month or two, we're going to make a decision about whether we really want to go to trial or not."

The BTK killer, whose nickname stands for "Bind, Torture, Kill," has been linked to 10 slayings between 1974 and 1991 in the Wichita area.

Rader, 60, of Park City, Kan., was arrested on Feb. 25 and is charged with 10 counts of first-degree murder in those killings. He is scheduled for a preliminary hearing on April 19 before District Judge Greg Waller.

Rader cannot plea bargain, Osburn and representatives of the district attorney's office said, and could only change his plea from not guilty to guilty or no contest. The latter plea means the defendant agrees not to fight the charges but does not admit guilt.

If a defendant were to plead guilty, he would have to read a statement admitting he committed the crime, Osburn said. In a no-contest plea, the state would summarize the evidence and present the case to a judge to determine if a jury would have convicted the defendant with the same evidence.

Osburn said one consideration to make is the need to review 31 years of evidence in the case.

"We haven't seen a drop in the bucket," Osburn said of the evidence. "It's just massive."

The state will have to show at the preliminary hearing that there is enough evidence to convince the court of probable cause.

Deputy District Attorney Kim Parker will help prosecute Rader. She said the preliminary hearing could go on at least a week and would not be a typical pretrial murder hearing, which often lasts less than two hours.

Charlie Otero, who lost four members of his family to BTK in 1974, said he hopes for a trial in the case to answer his questions about why the killer targeted his family.

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Iraqi protests deadly
Iraq's interior minister warned citizens Monday not to hold protests, saying the gatherings were an invitation for a large-scale terrorist attack. His comments came a day after government bodyguards opened fire on a group of employees demanding higher wages, killing one person.
Story, Page 5

Schiavo weakening
Described by her father as weak and emaciated, Terri Schiavo clung to life Monday as police stepped up security outside her hospice room and protesters praying for last-minute intervention by the government kept vigil. Supporters of Schiavo carried their protest to both the White House and to Congress.

Possible end in sight
Iraq's outgoing interior minister predicted Monday that his country's emerging police and army may be capable of securing the nation in 18 months, saying his officers are beginning to take over from coalition forces. Insurgents, meanwhile, targeted Shiite pilgrims, setting off blasts that killed three people.

DO YOU AGREE WITH THE COURT'S DECISION NOT TO INTERVENE IN THE REMOVAL OF TERRI SCHIAVO'S FEEDING TUBE?

Terri Schiavo suffered catastrophic brain damage in 1990 when her heart stopped for several minutes because of a chemical imbalance and has been in intense care since. Numerous state court judges have sided with Schiavo's husband and legal guardian, Michael Schiavo, who says Terri Schiavo is in a vegetative state and would not want to continue living under such conditions. Terri's parents are fighting to have her feeding tube reinserted.

Burst pipes leave buildings without heat, hot water

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Twelve campus buildings were left without heat or warm water after steam pipes burst during spring break, causing an estimated $10,000 in damage.

The pipes are about 80 years old and broke after moving out of place, Dale Boggs, associate director of facilities maintenance and utilities, said.

"What happened is when pipe is heated like that, sometimes it moves," Boggs said.

The first pipes broke on Wednesday morning and melted phone lines. On Friday, the phone lines and the pipes were repaired. However, when the steam was sent through the pipes again on Saturday morning, another break was found, Boggs said.

"Steam pipes are covered in insulation so when you look at them you can't see a break," he said.

Boggs said parts to repair the pipes should arrive today and the lines should be repaired by Wednesday or Thursday.

In the meantime, good weather will prevent students, faculty and staff from feeling much of a difference, Ed Heptig, director of facilities, said.

"Drag a coat or light jacket with you for right now," he said.

Heptig said the university is already within two weeks of when the heat is normally shut down.

Boggs said there is a possibility that all of the older pipes will be replaced next semester to prevent something like this from happening again.

Clock tower still in progress

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The clock tower named in honor of Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco is still not complete.

Originally scheduled to be completed before Thanksgiving break, K-State facilities is now hoping to have it finished before the all-university open house.

Completion of the tower was delayed, due in part to waiting for materials for the tower itself and the clock faces.

Gerry Carter, director of facility planning, said the clock faces could go up as soon as this week.

"We still have to do one or two things in coordinating the actual clock and the backing that is going to go on it," he said.

The faces for the clock tower were designed by two students in the College of Architecture, Planning and Design.

Nate Adolf, senior in architecture, was one of the students chosen to help with the clock faces.

"They just wanted to get some students involved in it and maybe we could lend a hand to basically get students' point of view into it a little bit," he said.

Upon completion of the tower, Carter said there is a possibility of a celebration.

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN
Kenneth Holland, associate provost for International Programs, speaks to a group of students about a $15 fee to be imposed on international students beginning the fall semester.

New international student fee would replace budget cuts, fund salaries, programs

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The International Coordinating Council held a forum Monday evening to address a $15 enrollment fee that has been approved for international students beginning next semester.

Held at the International Student Center, the forum's purpose was to inform students about the new fee, to gather input concerning the expenditure of the $30,000 it is expected to generate and to allow students to ask questions and voice concerns.

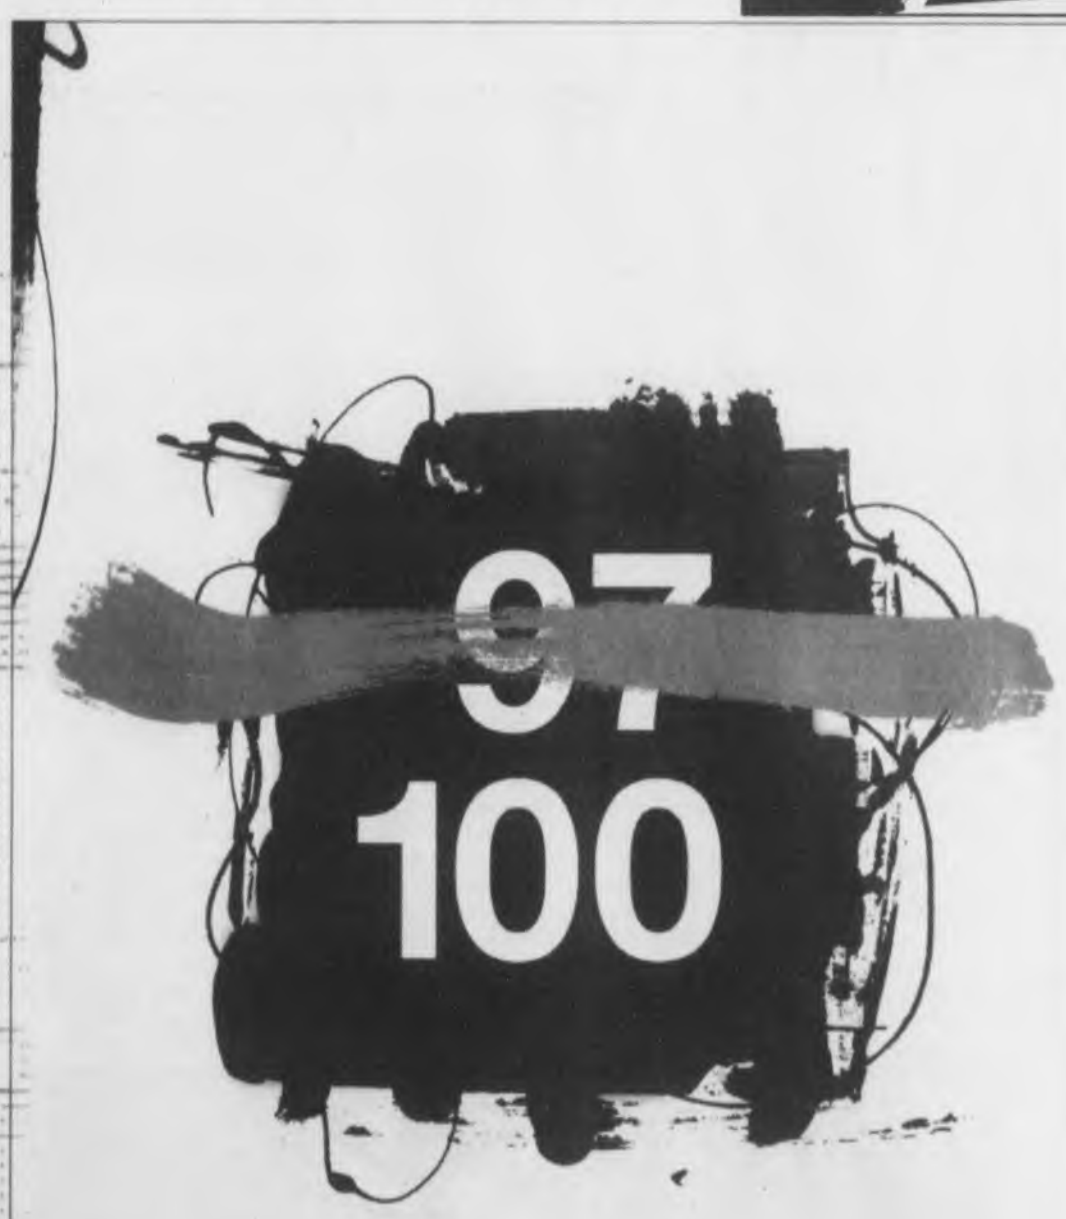
Kenneth Holland, associate provost for International Programs, attended the forum to explain the fee's purpose. He said that drastic cuts in state funding have made additional fees necessary at K-State and many other universities. Only 4 percent of state funding is used for student services at K-State.

"It's unfortunate that we had to do it in the first place... so we wanted to keep the fee as low as possible," he said. "We looked at our nearest neighbor, the University of Kansas, and matched their fee."

Although no detailed budget has been worked out yet, Holland estimated that about half of the money generated will pay the salaries of ICC staff members. The rest will be used solely for programming geared toward international students.

Many students and staff members in attendance accepted the need for the fee, but also expressed concerns about the process used to implement it.

"I think the flaw in the process is that neither our office or the students had any input until we were informed the fee was in place," Donna Davis, director of the International Student Center, said.



"I'm okay with the $15 fee, but I'm not comfortable with the fact the international students were not involved in making the decision," Chen-Hua Wu, senior in financial management, said.

Holland stressed that informing students about the use of the money was very important to the Office of International Programs. He said that student input would help to prioritize what programs the new revenue would fund and would be used in determining any future increases in the fee.

After the forum, several attendees said that international students need to take an active part in appropriating the money generated by the fee.

"I think that now we just have to be vigilant to see that the money is being spent the way it is planned," Aileen Corpuz, graduate student in curriculum instruction, said.

Land giveaway may help retain Kansas residents

Ellsworth County's Welcome Home Plan offers free plots of land for those considering relocating to the area. In the same spirit of the Homestead Act that brought pioneers to the plains over 100 years ago, this plan is an effort to lure new residents to central Kansas.

Ellsworth's land giveaway is a gamble, but it has the potential to provide the county with a new influx of residents that can provide its towns with much needed revenue.

Kansas' rural towns have been slowly but steadily losing inhabitants to more populated areas of the state.

Small Kansas communities are often unable to provide the goods and services that are readily available in larger towns and cities. Depopulation results in a cycle of service loss, job loss and further population declines.

Rural counties across the state must resort to new measures in an attempt to retain and even increase their populations. If land giveaway programs like Ellsworth's are proven successful, businesses will take an interest in rural communities as areas of expansion.

If small-town Kansas is to thrive, innovative population retention measures like the Welcome Home program should be given a chance to succeed.

In order to save the small-town heritages that characterize much of Kansas, the depopulation cycle needs to be reversed. Land giveaways like Ellsworth's are a step in the right direction.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The politics of gay marriage

Religious right's hypocrisy conjures images of Dante's 'Inferno'

JESSE MANNING

Next Tuesday, the people of the state of Kansas will head to the polls and likely approve a constitutional amendment that defines marriage as being between a man and a woman.

While such an outcome is supposed to "protect" marriage for hundreds of thousands of Kansas couples, it is blatantly meant to discriminate against one minority group in particular: homosexuals. The constitutional discrimination that is sweeping the United States is the result of a massive push by the conservative Christian right. While religious conservatives are free to hold any point of view, in their rush to outlaw practices disagreeing with their teachings, they ignore their own history.

When a fire swept through Rome in 66 AD, the emperor Nero picked a convenient group to blame: the newly formed religion of Christianity. Nearly 2,000 years later, Rev. Jerry Falwell chose homosexuals as one of the groups to blame for the terrorist attacks on Sept. 11, 2001.

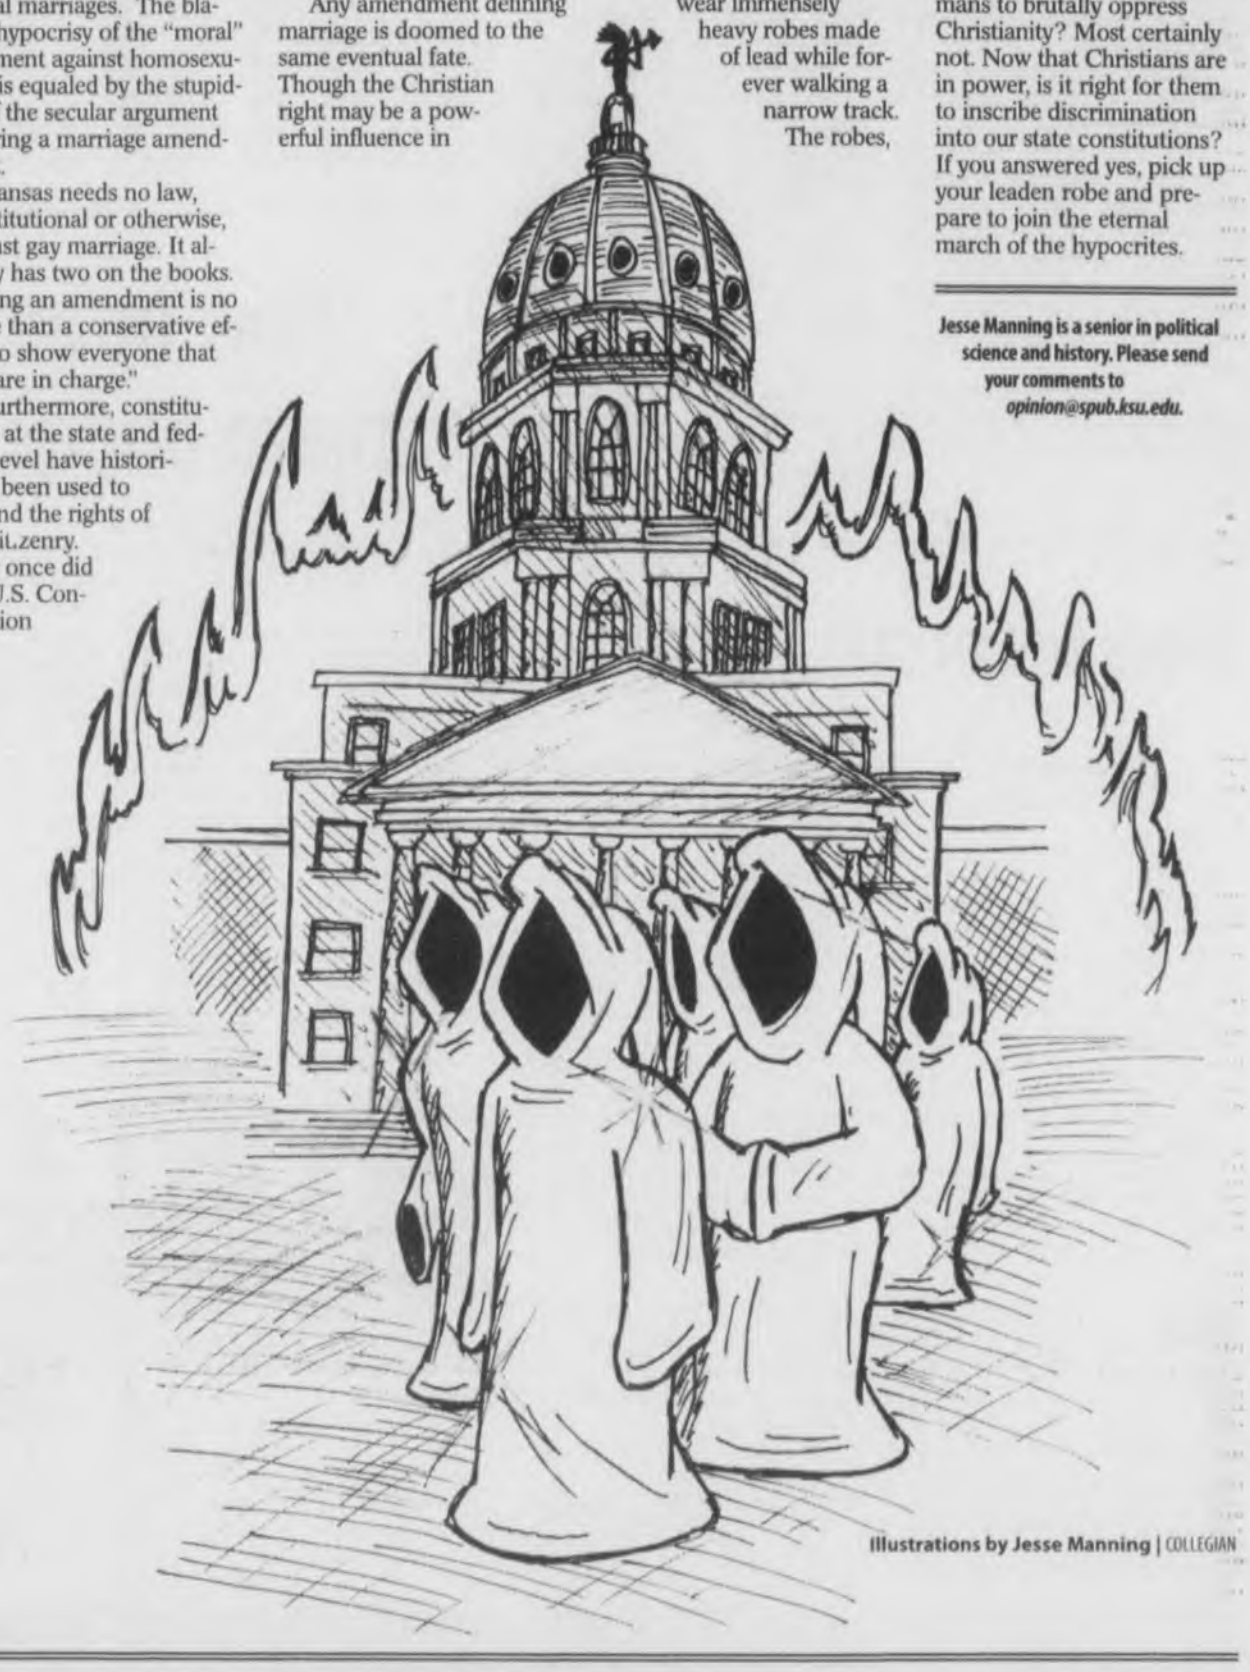
Those in power often choose minority groups to blame for their problems. The pagan Nero chose a stubborn new religion that refused to worship Rome's traditional gods. Two millennia later, that very same religion wields considerable influence within the state and national governments of the United States.

Instead of remembering the struggles of the early Christian minority, today's far-right religious leaders have become modern day Romans in an attempt to squash opposing views and "deviant" lifestyles. When Falwell chose homosexuals among the many other groups that he blamed for Sept. 11, 2001, he charted a path that the religious right has continued to follow.

He cast the first stone and blamed a minority for an attack far outside of their control. In doing so, Falwell and others ignored their own Christian roots.

The false arguments of religious conservatives are not to be believed. Those who clamor for the "sanctity of marriage" should be more concerned about the 50 percent divorce rate in heterosexual marriages. The blatant hypocrisy of the "moral" argument against homosexuality is equaled by the stupidity of the secular argument favoring a marriage amendment.

Kansas needs no law, constitutional or otherwise, against gay marriage. It already has two on the books. Passing an amendment is no more than a conservative effort to show everyone that "we are in charge."



Furthermore, constitutions at the state and federal level have historically been used to expand the rights of the citizenry. Only once did the U.S. Constitution seek to limit our rights. The 18th amendment banned the manufacture, sale and transportation of alcohol within the United States.

That limitation on our rights was a miserable failure and was repealed 14 years later by the 21st Amendment.

Any amendment defining marriage is doomed to the same eventual fate. Though the Christian right may be a powerful influence in politics today, they will learn that morality cannot be legislated, just as ancient Christians taught the Romans that their own "deviant" views could not be suppressed.

In "The Inferno," Dante Alighieri's infamous and poetic version of Hell, hypocrites are forced to wear immensely heavy robes made of lead while forever walking a narrow track. The robes, beautiful and brightly shining on the outside, hide the true weight of their inner deceit. If you are part of the right-wing religious movement that seeks to discriminate against homosexuality through legislative power, you must pause to look at history. Was it "right" for the Romans to brutally oppress Christianity? Most certainly not. Now that Christians are in power, is it right for them to inscribe discrimination into our state constitutions? If you answered yes, pick up your leaden robe and prepare to join the eternal march of the hypocrites.

Congress attempts to ease America's foreign dependence

KODY COOPER

America is an addicted junkie.

She habitually injects a euphoric "black heroin" into her veins. Cars, trains, airplanes, factories – her entire infrastructure and economy – are intravenously fed by this legalized depressant: oil.

To get her fix, America deals with several black heroin dealers around the world in countries like Venezuela and Saudi Arabia. Over half of her dependence rests upon foreign oil lords.

America is uneasy because she knows that foreign reliance is dangerous. She can become a slave to price gouging (oil prices recently hit a record high of $56.75 per barrel). This makes her people angry. Kansans are paying up to $2.24 per gallon of gas; Californians pay $3.05.

So America has determined to cultivate the goods from her own backyard. In a nail-biting 51-49 vote, the Senate recently approved black heroin exploration in the 1.5 million acre coastal plain of the 16.9 million acre Alaska National Wildlife Refuge.

ANWR, created in 1960, was first zoned for energy exploration in 1980.

It has been estimated by the U.S. Geological Survey that the region could produce between six billion and 16 billion barrels of oil, the single greatest prospect for oil and natural gas known to exist on U.S. soil. That could supply Kansas alone for the next 141 years.

ANWR oil would definitely soften the foreign dealers' grip on our proverbial nether regions.

However, opinions on the issue are currently divided mainly along party lines, with most Republicans in favor and most Democrats against. The elephants are at it again! This time, they are going to stampede the pristine Alaskan wilderness.

The environmentalists explain that oil drilling will ruin the majestic beauty of the landscape and adversely affect cute cuddly animals like the caribou. It seems the old elephants just turned off their hearing aids.

What possibly could have convinced those 51 fools to vote yea?

Maybe it's the fact that the legislation is the strictest environmentally regulative oil endeavor ever proposed.

But the enlightened environmentalists argue that is not enough. Oil drilling would still hurt the caribou population.

After all, those cuddly caribou in ANWR calve on the coastal plain. Yet the close-minded elephant senators ignored PETA in favor of the U.S. Geological Survey that reports a 95 percent chance that drilling won't affect caribou calving.

The elected elephants also acknowledge the National Academy of Science case study of caribou/oil field coexistence. The Central Arctic Herd of caribou in the North Slope has coexisted with the Prudhoe oil field for 30 years, and the herd has grown by 25,000.

Still, we all know that drill pads are eyesores. What if the legislation requires miniaturized drill pads that minimize terrain coverage?

This landscape is too beautiful to litter with oil rigs. We're talking about the coastal plain here! Don't those Republican also-rans realize how magnificent this area is?

This is known for its nine months of harsh winter, 75 degrees below zero wind chill, 56 days of darkness per year and miles of flat, white nothingness. How could we ever put oil rigs there?

The Republican "lies" go on and on.

ANWR development would create half-a-million new jobs for Americans?

It's obvious Bush is just attempting to make up for outsourcing all of our manufacturing jobs to India. He can't fool us.

Dubya, keep your grubs off Alaskan oil. We like flushing our greenbacks down the toilet at the pump. Besides, we'd rather trust stewardship of the earth to environmental champions like the Saudi royal family.

Tenants should use caution

Late payment fees, lease details should be analyzed

By Ben Spicer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's that time of the year, when students need to begin to plan their living situations for both the summer and next semester.

Student looking to move out of the residence halls or change from existing living arrangements can avoid the typical pitfalls that may haunt current students.

Sarah Barr, university attorney who provides legal services for students, said there are certain things that need to be understood before signing any potential agreement.

"What students often fail to understand is that signing a lease is a legal contract that can be enforced in court. Any changing of mind later with regards to the contract is very difficult to undo," she said. "Students also need to put serious thought into the people they wish to lease with because if one were to up and leave, any of the remaining individuals can be legally liable for the entire amount."

Barr said that knowing the actual terms and having a copy of the lease is very important. At 18, students are legally able to enter into contracts, so knowing how long a lease is in comparison to the amount of time you need to live there is essential to getting the best deal.

Also, she said it is important to be mindful of the agreed amount for rent as well as if there is any penalty for late payment.

Barr said students need to know what exactly is covered in the rent. It may or may not cover gas or electric bills, and quite often it may include access to a washer and dryer and or parking.

Bill Bahr, a local attorney in Manhattan who works on behalf of landlords in particular, said students need to be comfortable with all aspects of the contract to which they agree.

"Students need to like their place of choice and be satisfied with the terms and provisions of the lease. Students often think that if they decide to move that it will be easy to get out. They must be aware that their landlords will enforce the contract and hold them to it," he said.

According to the Manhattan Code Services, which produces a document of property maintenance codes of the city of Manhattan, there are certain responsibilities to which both the landlord and the tenant must adhere.

These responsibilities are expected of both the tenant and the landlord and cannot be assigned away in any contract.

It is important to know that although typical expectations like running hot and cold water must be provided, it is not required for a landlord to provide air conditioning.

Barr emphasized that having knowledge helps to reduce the chances of being in a situation which is unlivable.

"Doing your homework from start to finish during the leasing process should reduce your likelihood of a problem later," she said.

Free rural land attracts families

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The word "free" has become virtually non-existent in today's society, unless you're in Ellsworth, Kan., that is, and what's free is the land.

It started about two years ago, when the town of Ellsworth, population 6,000, was losing people faster than it was gaining them, said Anita Hoffhines, director of Ellsworth County economic development.

"Our population was negative 2.7 percent," Hoffhines said. "We needed to figure out what stopped people from moving to Ellsworth."

Thus, a working group of 25 members from the community created the Welcome Home Plan to attract new people.

Sarah Geiger, loan representative for the First Bank of Kansas in Ellsworth and one of the 25 group members, said the group's main plan was derived from similar plans already in progress in Minneapolis, Kan., and Marquette, Kan.

"We pretty much took their plan and enhanced their ideas to make it work for our community," Geiger said.

The Welcome Home Plan appeals to the locals and many families nationwide.

With advertising in the Chicago Sun-Times, The Washington Post and a front page article in the USA Today, it hasn't been hard to draw attention coast to coast.

"In 18 months, I've had between 3,000 and 4,000 people contact me," Hoffhines said.

While thousands have voiced interest, Hoffhines said, only a few have actually settled in Ellsworth, partly due to certain qualifications the Welcome Home Plan has established.

"These people can't be financially unstable – they have to be able to purchase a home," Hoffhines said.

To qualify for the plan, people must be able to make a down payment, have good credit and be able to find a job in Ellsworth, Hoffhines said.

Although only two lots have been built on and one reserved, a different and surprising trend has caught on, Hoffhines said.

"The free land attracts people to Ellsworth, and then they see a home for sale," Hoffhines said. "They use their down payment money instead on a house that has already been built."

Eleven families have moved in. These 11 families bring 16 new school-aged and six preschool-aged children, Hoffhines said. While it increases the population, the addition of kids in the school system also provides an additional $6,000 in state aid for the schools each year.

The schools, Hoffhines said, are one of the driving forces drawing people from Louisiana, Florida and New Jersey to Ellsworth.

"These people want to get out of a big town and find good schools," Hoffhines said.

Kimberly Bayless, who moved from Las Vegas with her husband and four children, said the small-town atmosphere is what made the move so appealing.

"There were too many people in a confined area, and it was very fast-paced," Bayless said of Las Vegas.

The only downfall to the move, Bayless said, is all the publicity their family is receiving, especially since appearing on the Today Show.

"It was an interesting experience," she said, "but it would be nice to have things settle down again."

While Bayless is ready to have life slow down a bit, Hoffhines, Geiger and the city of Ellsworth are not.

Geiger said she believes the Welcome Home Plan will continue to attract families.

"It's a very creative plan and it's striking at the heart of many people throughout the country," she said.

Students spend hundreds on break trips

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students used spring break to their advantage. While some students were in warm spots, others went skiing.

Jamie Smidt, freshman in agriculture journalism, went skiing in Eldora, Colo. She went with a church group.

"I went with eight guys from this church group," Smidt said. "They needed more people to go with them so they could get the group rate, so I decided to go."

Smidt has gone skiing on five or six previous occasions. She said that skiing is fun and good for her body.

"I love skiing. It's one of my favorite sports," she said. "And it's easy on my knees."

Joelle Mausolf, junior in political science and pre-law, went to Key Largo, Fla., for her spring break trip. Her father lives in Key Largo and wanted her to come visit. He paid for her part of the trip and offered her and her friend, Lisa Branch, junior in social work, a place to stay while visiting.

"My dad wanted us to come visit him and financially, it made sense for me," Mausolf said.

While in Key Largo, Mausolf and Branch went to Key West, Fla., on a sunset cruise and went to a full-moon party that featured bonfires on the beach and reggae music. Mausolf said she has been to Key Largo many times and likes it there.

"It's a cool place, like paradise," she said.

Allie Hanson, sophomore in marketing, went to Acapulco, Mexico, in a trip with Chi Omega and Pi Beta Phi sorority members. The trip was offered for a package price so 25 Chi Os and 20 Pi Phis went.

Hanson said to be in a country where English is not the primary language was a fun opportunity.

"It was a good experience, and I got to practice my Spanish," Hanson said.

Hanson said the trip included a club package so the girls could see many of Acapulco's clubs.

Hanson said the girls did a variety of activities while in Mexico.

"We went to the beach, hung by the pool and took a boat ride around the bay," she said.

Hallee Heinen, freshman in journalism, decided to stay home for the break. Heinen said spring break trips were too expensive.

"I didn't feel like spending the money," Heinen said.

Over break, Heinen said she was glad for the opportunity to unwind.

"I did a whole lot of nothing," she said. "I relaxed and did some shopping."

How much?

Student spending on break

- Jamie Smidt, freshman in agriculture journalism.
  - Destination: skiing in Colorado
  - $100 per day for skiing fees
  - $110 per night for motel fees
  - $250 total including food and gas
- Joelle Mausolf, junior in political science and pre-law.
  - Destination: Key Largo, Fla.
  - $600 first-class plane tickets
- Allie Hanson, sophomore in marketing.
  - Destination: Acapulco, Mexico
  - $1,000 package: $850 plane tickets, hotel rooms, traveling fees and $150 club package.

Iraqi interior minister warns against protests

By Traci Carl
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Iraq's interior minister warned citizens Monday not to hold protests, saying the gatherings were an invitation for a large-scale terrorist attack. His comments came a day after government bodyguards opened fire on a group of employees demanding higher wages, killing one person.

Interim Interior Minister Falah al-Naqib, likely to be out of office once the new government takes over, said the protest was among "attempts to destabilize the situation" in Iraq. He accused the protesters of trying to enter the office of Science and Technology Minister Rashad Mandan Omar and said the bodyguards where just doing their job by protecting the official.

Haithem Jassim, one of three people injured in the melee, said the demonstrators were unarmed.

Iraqis elected a new parliament on Jan. 30 in the first free elections there in 50 years, but progress in forming the new government has been slow. Officials have acknowledged that has caused a gap in some services, frustrating citizens.

But al-Naqib warned against future protests, saying they are a perfect target for insurgent bombings.

"Iraq has witnessed more bloodshed than it should," he said. "We are witnessing a situation in which Iraqi blood is becoming very cheap."

He added that Iraq's most-wanted terrorist, Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, was "surrounded in more than one area, and we hope for the best.

He's moving between more than one area."

Cats lose to Baylor, bounce back to beat Texas-Arlington

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's tennis team split two road matches with Baylor and Texas-Arlington over spring break and in the process put an end to its 12-match road losing streak.

The Wildcats (5-6, 1-3) got off on the wrong foot with a 6-1 loss to No. 17 Baylor, but bounced back with a 5-2 win over Texas-Arlington, collecting their first road win in 13 tries.

"It was about time," senior Maria Rosenberg said about breaking the streak. "We knew (a win) would eventually happen. I think we played better than before. We fought harder and it was a pretty good result against Texas-Arlington."

The best individual results over the break came from Tamar Kvaratskhelia, the only Wildcat to win both singles matches. Kvaratskhelia came from behind to beat Baylor's Carolin Walter before beating UT-Arlington's Daniela Novakova in straight sets.

The freshman said she fought hard and was pleased with her play this weekend.

"I think I played well and did my best," she said. "It wasn't my best ever, but I tried. When we played against Baylor, I was down, and then I came back and I won. I think that was a really good match and a good fight. I'm happy; I'm satisfied."

Already the K-State single-season record holder for the most wins by a freshman, Kvaratskhelia now has her sights set on the all-time single-season record. Her 24-4 record this season puts her within four matches of tying Karina Kuregian for the record, who went 28-7 in the 1994-95 season.

Kvaratskhelia said she is aiming to break the record, and believes she has put in the time and energy necessary to earn the new mark.

"Now I'm really looking forward to breaking another record," she said. "I'm really looking to get it. I think I can do it and I'm going to try my best to break another record and another. I worked really hard for this before I got here and when I got here, so I think I kind of deserve it."

While this season has been a success for Kvaratskhelia so far, she said breaking the record is easier said than done.

"I don't know how good the girls are that I'm playing, but I do think it will be tough," she said. "I will try though, and I will be aggressive."

Beginning of spring starts with football

MICHAEL ASHFORD

All right, enough of this March Madness stuff.

While some people judge the return of spring by the start of the NCAA Tournament, the robins flying about or the flowers blooming, spring never really begins until K-State spring football starts.

As one of the last college football programs in the country to start its spring drills, when K-State puts the pads on from late March to late April, you can finally say that spring has arrived.

It couldn't have come at a better time.

Something needs to take the bad taste out of my mouth from the way the Wildcats ended the basketball season.

The K-State men were robbed of an NIT berth, and then I had to stress over whether Head Coach Jim Wooldridge would be back next year.

Thankfully, he will be.

Then the K-State women ended their season in the second round of the NCAA Tournament, again. At least I got to go to Seattle, which could be one of the most beautiful places in the world if it didn't rain all the time.

However, I do have to give huge props to the Bison of Bucknell University. Thanks to those guys, I only had to worry about Kansas winning the tournament for one game this year.

I loved watching and listening to the Jayhawk nation totally implode on itself after that loss. How quickly Hawks fans turned their collective backs on their beloved seniors and coach.

But back to my original point.

Spring football is here, my friends.

Starting tomorrow, the Wildcat football team will be laying the foundation for the 2005 season with 32 days of practice, and then the spring game, while trying to cleanse the sickening thought of last season out of the hearts and minds of Wildcat fans everywhere.

I am ready to move on from last year. In fact, I want to totally erase last year from my memory.

I am pumped about this upcoming season, because no one is expecting anything from K-State, which is not a problem with me.

I am stoked to see what quarterback Allan Evridge can do running the offense, if running backs Thomas Clayton or Parrish Fisher can take over for iron man Darren Sproles, and if K-State will get any sort of semblance of good linebacker play.

It should be an interesting month of K-State spring football, culminating with the spring game on April 30.

Can the Wildcats rebound from last season's absolute meltdown and return the K-State program to its position as a dominating force in the Big 12 Conference?

Maybe, but it will take a lot of hard work by the players, and possibly Head Coach Bill Snyder's best coaching of his career as he enters his 17th season at K-State.

Snyder seems like a man on a completely different mission this spring, as he should be. Last year

Hoping to bounce back from a weekend sweep at the hands of the Missouri Tigers in the first home Big 12 action of the year, K-State (13-10, 1-5) will be taking on the Wichita State Shockers in non-conference action at 7 tonight at Tointon Family Stadium.

"It should be a good match up," Coach Brad Hill said. "They have a great pitching staff and great tradition."

The Shockers (22-6) are coming in to Manhattan off a series sweep of Iowa over the weekend.

Wichita State is led offensively by senior shortstop Nick McCoola from Durango, Colo. McCoola is batting .346 in 107 at bats, with 20 RBI.

The Shockers will put freshman Max Hutson on the mound to face the Wildcats. Hutson has a 1-0 record with a 5.14 ERA. He has given up four earned runs in 7.0 innings of work with two walks and five strike-outs.

The Wildcats are taking a mid-week conference break to take on the Shockers before traveling to Texas for a weekend series.

Women show signs of improvement, finish 10th in tourney

By Ben Fallin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With its lowest single-round total and lowest three-round total of the spring thus far, the K-State women's golf team shot a three-round total of 896 and finished 10th in the seventh annual Mountain View Collegiate over the weekend.

K-State had a season-best single-round team total of 290 on Sunday, bolstered by sophomore Katy Heffel's strong performance. The Mesa, Ariz., native shot a career best 71 on Sunday and had a career best 220 total during the 54-hole tournament to tie for 15th.

"Everything came together for Katy," Head Coach Kristi Knight said. "This was a shorter course and since she has such length, she has an advantage when she hits the ball that far.

"She has improved her wedge play and is putting better. She came onto the green with some good shots, giving herself lots of opportunities."

Along with Katy Heffel's finish, K-State had three other golfers finish in the top 40. Senior Sarah Heffel and freshman Kali Quick finished in a tie for 35th with scores of 225. Quick finished on Sunday with a score of 72 and moved up 14 spots after being in a tie for 49th.

Sophomore Helene Robert finished in a tie for 37th. Robert, from Lac Brome, Quebec, finished 10-over-par with a 226, making the largest leap of the weekend for the Wildcats. She was 55th after two rounds and made a leap of 18 spots. K-State's other competitor, freshmen Michelle Reagan, finished in 79th with a three-round total of 249.

K-State will have one more chance to compete before the Big 12 Championships in Austin, Texas on April 22. The Wildcats next action will come April 9-10 at the Susie Maxwell Classic in Norman, Okla.

CFB | USC cornerback booked on rape charges

LOS ANGELES — Southern California starting cornerback Eric Wright has been arrested for investigation of sexual assault, police said Sunday.

Wright

The 19-year-old player was taken into custody early Saturday at a campus apartment by officers investigating reports of an assault, police spokeswoman Sara Faden said.

Wright was booked on rape charges and bail was set at $100,000, according to the Sheriff's Department. Wright posted bail and was released, Faden said.

Faden said no additional details were immediately available.

CBB | Budke named head coach at Oklahoma State

STILLWATER, Okla. — Oklahoma State was expected to hire Louisiana Tech coach Kurt Budke as its new women's basketball coach on Monday, Tech's athletic director said.

Budke

The Cowgirls planned a news conference Monday afternoon to announce their new coach after a two-week search. Budke interviewed for the job last week and had been considered a front-runner for the position.

Budke would replace Julie Goodenough, who resigned March 14 after three consecutive 20-loss seasons.

NBA | Seattle forward refuses to enter game

SEATTLE — The Seattle SuperSonics suspended Danny Fortson for their game against Washington, two days after he refused to enter a game against New York.

Fortson

Although the Sunday night suspension was for one game, Fortson will not accompany the Sonics on their two-game road trip to Memphis and San Antonio this week while he recovers from a sprained left ankle.

General manager Rick Sund said Fortson told coach Nate McMillan he couldn't play in the second half of the Knicks' game, which the Sonics won 109-101 in overtime, because he wasn't ready.

Sund said he met with Fortson Saturday and informed him of the suspension.

MLB | Padres acquire RHP Redding from Astros

KISSIMMEE, Fla. — The Houston Astros traded pitcher Tim Redding and cash to the San Diego Padres for catcher Humberto Quintero on Monday.

Redding

Redding, 27, was 5-7 with a 5.72 ERA in 27 games for the Astros last season, including 17 starts and a demotion to the bullpen in July. The right-hander also went 1-3 with a 6.04 ERA at Triple-A New Orleans.

Redding was 21-28 with a 4.75 ERA in four seasons with Houston. He went 10-14 with a team-leading 3.68 ERA in the Astros' rotation in 2003.

NFL | Network takes control of team regional networks

NEW YORK — Owners have voted to disband regional networks run by the Dallas Cowboys and Atlanta Falcons.

In return, the teams will get items for local use from the network, which conducts shows that include all 32 coaches.

The decision was made at last week's meetings in Maui, Sports Business Journal reported Monday. It was approved by a vote of 30-1 with one abstention.

The NFL Network began broadcasting in late 2003 and has had increasing control in recent months in broadcasting league events, ranging from announcements of the Hall of Fame vote to live news conferences from league meetings.

Wine guide

Different occasions call for specific wines, offers opportunity to add class, sophistication to any party

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Wine truly is an unusual entity. There are hundreds of varieties of wine, each with its own distinct flavor and aroma. Wine can be enjoyed during dinner to stimulate appetite and aid in digestion. Drinking a glass of wine can help reduce stress, or it can be used as a sleep aid. Wine is an excellent accompaniment to a romantic evening.

According to the American Heart Association, a glass of wine a day can help reduce the risk of heart disease, high blood pressure and stroke.

WHAT IS WINE?

"Nothing more excellent or valuable than wine was ever granted by God to humanity." – Plato

Wine is an alcoholic drink made by fermenting the juice of grapes. For nearly 10,000 years wine has been manufactured. Becoming acquainted with wine can be a daunting task. With so many different types of wine, it can be difficult to find the right bottle for the right occasion. Fear not, it is much easier than it seems.

WINE CLASSIFICATION

"A glass of wine is a great refreshment after a hard day's work." – Beethoven

Wine is named by the brand or producer's name, along with the specific grape variety used to create it or the geographic region of the wine's origin. A model would be Edna Valley Vineyards' Chardonnay or Georges Duboeuf's Beaujolais-Villages.

"Grapes range across a wide variety," Mike Towne, owner of The Library Discount Liquor Store, said. "The type fermented determines the type of wine."

The label given to a wine – for example, Chardonnay – is assigned because most of the wine is made from that variety of grape. Each grape has a unique color, flavor and aroma.

"Wine is an agricultural product; every country has rules and regulations for naming the wine," Towne said. "For example, a Cabernet might have a certain percentage of Merlot."

Wine is made in 44 countries around the world. It is often associated with European countries such as Italy, France and Germany, but the United States, Australia, New Zealand and South America are becoming well noted for their wine production.

MAJOR TYPES OF WINE

"Good wine is a necessity of life for me." – Thomas Jefferson

One way that wine is listed is the process by which it is made.

Fortified wine is a type that is named because the wine has been fortified with brandy to 18-24 percent alcohol. These wines are mainly dessert wines and include Port, Sherry, Marsala and Madeira.

Aromatized wine is a type of fortified wine. This wine has herbs, spices or flowers added to the wine in order to give it a distinct and special flavor. The most famous of these wines is vermouth, which is enjoyed a great deal in Europe.

Sparkling wine is wine to which bubbles have been added. The most popular of these wines is champagne.

Table wine, or "still" wine, is a wine that is usually enjoyed at a meal. It is usually about 7-14 percent alcohol. Most wines are classified as table wines.

Another method to further classify wine is by the grape variety used to make the wine. There are over 2,500 grape varieties.

WHITE WINE

"Wine is proof that God wanted man to be happy." – Benjamin Franklin

Chardonnay is considered to be the finest of the white wines. This particular wine is the basis for champagne. This wine is often characterized with having a citrus-like or apple-like flavor. Chardonnay is most commonly associated with France, but Australia and New Zealand are making huge strides in becoming known for their Chardonnays.

Pinot grigio is another popular white wine. This particular wine is said to have a flavor close to green apples and is an excellent companion to many foods.

Sauvignon blanc is a very aromatic grape that is noted for having a wide variety of flavors. Depending on where and how it is produced, it can have a flavor ranging from grassy to melon-like.

RED WINE

"Citrus, passion fruit, just the faintest soupcon of asparagus, and like, a nutty Edam cheese." – Miles Raymond (Paul Giamatti) from the movie "Sideways"

Red wines are perhaps the best known varieties of wine. Most are best served at a cool room temperature.

Cabernet sauvignon is the most successful wine produced in California. It has a complex flavor that many say is a mix of berries with hints of cedar and chocolate.

Merlot is a wine that is very popular because of its smooth texture and taste. This grape variety is often added to other wines to make them more appealing.

Pinot noir is combined with other grape varieties to create some of the best known wines in the world. The wine has a very subtle texture and is very popular in the United States.

"Pinot noir has had a huge surge of popularity," Towne said. "It was featured in the movie 'Sideways,' so it has recently received a lot of press."

Zinfandel is the most widely planted grape in California. It is also responsible for a number of wine styles and is often used to add character to many wines.

FOOD AND WINE

"Any wine with a meal is better than no wine at all." – Unknown

Matching food to wine is not an exact science, but there are some rules to follow when deciding what to serve with a meal. The most basic rule is "red wine with red meat, white wine with fish." When serving a meal from a certain region, it is best to match the meal with a wine from that same region. Fish and poultry are best with white wines. Hearty meals such as pasta, roasts and cheeses are best served with red wines.

Another thing to consider is the flavor of the dish served. For food served with red or brown sauces, a red wine is recommended.

For cream sauces and lemon butters, white wine is best, because lemon juice can make red wine taste sour. For dessert it is best to match it with a sweet or sparkling wine. Web sites are dedicated to matching wine with food, Towne said.

RECOMMENDED WINES

"There is so much good, affordable wine out there, it is tough to go through one store and talk about all of them," Towne said.

When entering the world of wine, it is best to start with a sweeter wine or a wine that is not too robust, dry or aromatic. A wine from Australia perfect for beginners is Yellow Tail.

"Yellow Tail is one of the most popular imported Australian wines; it appeals to a lot of peoples' tastes," Towne said. "It is the number-one selling wine in Manhattan, period."

Yellow Tail is very affordable; a 750-milliliter bottle costs about $6.

Red Truck is also an excellent wine to start with. It is a blended wine with a light fruity taste. It is not as dry as a lot of red wines, Towne said. A bottle can be purchased for around $10.

King Estate is a wine produced in Oregon by K-State graduate Ed King. A bottle costs around $23. For more information, visit www.kingestate.com.

Towne suggests Rosemount wine as a nice trade-up for someone who is looking to sample a wine that is a little more substantial than cheaper wines.

Most liquor stores have wine days that offer a discount on all wines available in the store. This is an excellent way for students to pick up wine at a better price, Towne said.

Wine is a very vast subject. When thinking of what wine is best for you, determine what kinds of flavors appeal to you.

Acid-folk trio sends columnist on unforgettable trip

"Espers"
Album review by Mark Sibilla

It was a cold, blustery January afternoon. I was packing my book bag after my final class and I decided to listen to the debut, self-titled CD from the Espers, an acid-folk trio of Greg Weeks, Meg Baird and Brooke Sietinsons.

I pop the CD into my player, put on my headphones and hit "play." The first thing I hear is the sound of chimes gently blowing in the wind. Thus begins "Flowery Noontide."

A gently strummed guitar enters, accompanied by a lovely flute and Meg Baird's beautiful alto. I begin to notice the colors of the foliage glowing brighter, and I feel my stomach begin to turn. The buildings change color, and everything in my vision begins to swirl.

The song progresses with harpsichord flourishes to add even more texture to this impressively beautiful melody. The track fades as it began – with the lovely sound of wind chimes.

I am thrown into "Meadows," with a lightly strummed guitar and the drone of a dulcimer and keyboards. Weeks sings about "our willingness to die." I am struck with paranoia, but the sound of Baird's backing, lullaby-like singing keeps me grounded.

The swirling colors pick me up as strings swell in and out of the song. This hurls me directly into "Riding." I am in the back seat of a car with Weeks, Baird and Sietinsons. Sietinsons softly strums her guitar as the night wind blows in through the open windows and messes my hair.

I listen to the beautiful harmony and begin to doze. The harsh entrance of an electric guitar awakens me. The song ends with a beautiful coda of electric and acoustic guitar. I drift off to sleep.

I am suddenly awakened, with the strummed guitar that begins "Voices," alone in the middle of a field. I don't know where I am, but somehow I know where I'm going. I follow the wonderful music, but I become lost again when harsh cello chords end the song.

"Hearts & Daggers" begins and I know this song will be intense. The lightly strummed guitar and soft flute enter ominously as Weeks and Baird trade lead vocals back and forth. The song grows more powerful as a violently bowed cello enters the mix. Then, without warning, the track takes a sharp left turn and the instruments psychedelically melt together.

I am dropped into "Byss & Abyss." I still don't know where I am; it all seems so familiar, yet its sad beauty eclipses anything I have heard before.

I close my eyes and blindly wander into the cavernous environment where this song has dropped me. I trip and begin to fall into an endless chasm, turning and turning – suddenly my descent begins to slow as the guitar enters again and the track softly lands me on my feet and leads me into "Daughter."

I am then confronted with the final song, "Travel Mountains." A hollow wind is generated and a mix of guitar, harpsichord and haunting vocals build intensity within the song. I allow my vortex guide to take me; the voices swirl and surge me forward.

I land on the top of my roof, headphones securely fastened to my ears. The album comes to a close and the sun begins to rise. I catch my breath and excitedly press the 'play' button again.

Jackson jury allowed to hear of past allegations

In a major setback for Michael Jackson, a judge ruled Monday that the jury can hear allegations that the pop star molested or had designs on five other boys, including actor Macaulay Culkin and two youngsters who reached multimillion-dollar settlements with the singer.

District Attorney Tom Sneddon said Jackson's inappropriate activities with these boys included kissing, hugging and inserting his hands into their pants. He also said there was a pattern of "grooming," or preparing the boys for molestation, but did not elaborate.

Jackson, 46, is on trial on charges he molested one boy, then 13, at his Neverland ranch in 2003.

Rapper T.I. comments on fisticuffs with Lil' Flip

At least they used fists, not guns. A simmering dispute between chart-topping rappers T.I. and Lil' Flip broke out into a tussle in Flip's hometown of Houston, T.I. confirmed during a recent radio station appearance.

Speaking on 107.9 FM in his hometown of Atlanta, T.I. said that the two crossed paths in Flip's Cloverland neighborhood, where T.I. was filming a DVD.

"He was walking behind the car and I'm walking up to him trying to beg him to come out from behind the car, so we can get a square deal going," T.I. said.

Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications at Kansas State University jointly seek applicants for a 12-month, non tenure-track position. The person hired will serve as news adviser to the award-winning campus daily newspaper, the Collegian and the electronic Collegian and teach two classes per semester in the Miller School. The successful applicant will begin June 1, 2005, and will report to the director of the Miller School and to the director of Student Publications Inc. A bachelors degree and professional experience in print media is required. Master's degree and/ or previous experience advising student publications is preferred. Applicants should have demonstrated a commitment to students' rights and responsibilities under the First Amendment and have a strong adherence to journalistic standards as outlined by the Society of Professional Journalist Code of Ethics. Competitive salary is based upon qualifications and experience. Kansas State University and Student Publications Inc., are equal opportunity employers. Review of applications will begin April 1, 2005. Candidates are asked to send a letter of application, contact information for three references and vita or resume to: Selection Committee A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications Kansas State University 105 Kedzie Hall Manhattan, KS 66506-1501. Additional materials including a statement of teaching and publications advising philosophy are welcomed. Please send electronic submissions and inquiries to Pat Hudgins at phudgin@ksu.edu. The Collegian: Student Publications Inc. students have been producing the Collegian for K-State students since 1896. With a press run of 11,000 each weekday morning of fall and spring semesters, the paper is one of the state's largest morning dailies. Funding comes from Student Activity fees and from the student advertising staff that sells more than $500,000 in display advertising each year. The summer Collegian is published Wednesdays in June and July. The Collegian is one of the nation's most honored college newspapers. In Spring 2003 and 2004 the Collegian received a Gold Crown award from the Columbia Scholastic Press Association and in 2002 and 2004 won the Apple Award for best of show at the convention from the College Media Advisers. The Collegian is a frequent recipient of the Pacemaker Award from the College Media Advisers. For more information go to http://www.spub.ksu.edu. Student Publications. Student Publications Inc. is an independent, $1.3 million corporation that publishes the Kansas State Collegian newspaper, the Royal Purple yearbook and the K-State Phone Book. With more than 150 students on its payroll, Student Publications Inc. is one of the university's largest student employers. Five full time staff members assist the director in supporting the student staffs. The School. The K-State journalism and mass communications program is one of the oldest in the nation dating back to 1910. The Miller School has four sequences— advertising, electronic media, journalism (including electronic news), and public relations. The undergraduate program has been rated among the 20 best in the country. The Miller School, which is privately endowed, is the largest academic unit within the College of Arts and Sciences and the largest major on campus with an undergraduate enrollment of about 660. The graduate program offers a M.S. in Mass Communications with an enrollment of 30 students. The Miller School is fully accredited by ACEJMC. The University: Kansas State University, a comprehensive public education and research institution, was founded in 1863 and is one of the first three land grant institutions. It is located in Manhattan, KS, about 120 miles west of Kansas City. The Manhattan campus serves about 21,000 students. Kansas State University ranks first nationally among state universities in its number of Rhodes, Marshall, Truman, Goldwater and Udall scholars. Go to http://www.ksu.edu/ and http://www.k-state.edu/pa/statinfo/factbook. A copy of the university handbook which includes employment and promotion policies and procedures is available at http://www.k-state.edu/academicservices/fhbook/. The City: Manhattan has a permanent population of about 50,000. Located in the beautiful Flint Hills of north central Kansas, Manhattan is the county seat for Riley County and the retail center and medical hub for several counties. The town boasts a quality of life that includes an abundance of parks, an accredited zoo, recreation facilities and arts programs. The school system is considered one of the best in the state. Luhrs said she is very interested in the way teachers interact with students in the classroom.

"I've always wanted to teach in some capacity and to affect policy because of my background as a teacher," she said. "I will always teach in some capacity."

Luhrs has always been very mature for her age and intellectually curious, Janice Wissman, associate dean and professor of education said. She said she met Luhrs when Luhrs was a freshman in her honors seminar class and has taught her in two other seminars.

She has always had a strong commitment to encouraging diversity in the classroom and in all educational activities in which she takes part, Wissman said.

"When I first met (Luhrs), I thought, 'this is a person who's going to be successful in the classroom and has the potential to be a leader in the field of education,'" she said.

Luhrs is completing a leadership studies minor and the honors program at K-State as well as her bachelor's degree in secondary education.

"I want to teach because you can give so much of yourself, but the gifts that you get in return are always worth more, seeing personal development and growth in students," she said.

SMOKING | Stores card underage customers

"Riley County is average with underage tobacco use, I wouldn't say that it was more or less than anywhere else," he said. "A lot of juveniles have a tendency to try tobacco."

Candice Taft, Casey's General Store employee, said she has had five underage people try to come in and buy cigarettes in the last two weeks.

"We ask for their identification, and they usually say that they don't have it and then leave," she said.

Taft does not really see the underage smokers, typically high school students, as a big problem.

"If they want to do it, they will do it," she said. "If we don't give it to them, then they will probably find someone else, who usually is of age, to buy it for them."

Susan Toburen, Dara's Fast Lane employee, said that she has only had one underage person try to buy cigarettes.

She also said that most of the underage people who come in look like they're in high school.

"I am against smoking, period, and I think that underage smoking is a big problem," she said. "I think it needs to be fixed."

The Coalition for Responsible Tobacco Retailing's "We Card" program helps retailers educate employees on preventing underage tobacco use. The program encourages clerks to always ask for ID for anyone who appears to be under age 27.

Both Dara's Fast Lane and Casey's General Store, as well as many other convenience stores in the area, have "We Card" program stickers in sight to tell underage customers that they will card for tobacco.

BASEBALL | Wildcats in last place in conference with 1-5 record

1-5, with their only win coming off a Sunday victory two weeks ago against Oklahoma State, in Stillwater, Okla.

A conference record of 1-5 places K-State last in the Big 12 standings.

"We just need to wipe stuff off clean everyday and go out and play the next game and not worry about what went wrong," Hill said.

K-State is currently tied for first in the Big 12 Conference in batting average with Texas Tech, with a team average of .334.

Junior Brandon Farr is fourth in the league in hitting, while senior Terry Blunt is eighth.

Farr is leading the Wildcats with a .406 batting average in 69 at bats and has driven in 20 runs for the Wildcats on 28 hits.

Junior Joe Roundy has also been hitting well for K-State with a .313 batting average in Big 12 play.

"It will be fun to play Wichita State," Roundy said. "Coach says there is going to be a big crowd and we will get more students out here."

The slated starter for K-State is junior right-hander Brett Muegge. Muegge is 1-1 for the Wildcats, with a 6.75 ERA on 8.0 innings. Muegge has given up 10 hits and six earned runs while walking one and striking out six.

Junior pitcher Adam Cowart said he believes the Wildcats can be successful against the Shockers.

"We just need to keep playing our ball," Cowart said.

136th Landon Lecture

Reducing risk

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There is still work to be done before Americans are safe from another terrorist attack.

"We might not be able to eliminate terrorism but we can certainly reduce the risks," Lee Hamilton, vice chair of the 9/11 Commission, said.

Hamilton, a former Indiana Congressman, delivered the 136th Landon Lecture Tuesday in McCain Auditorium.

He outlined four steps to increase success in the War on Terror.

First, the threat must be identified. Hamilton said Osama bin Laden is most likely not calling the shots but the greatest threat could be radical Islamic groups who were inspired by al-Qaeda.

"That will menace Americans long after bin Laden has left the scene," Hamilton said.

He said he has developed a certain amount of respect for bin Laden because he was able to organize 19 men for a mission at a cost of $500,000.

"He appeals to a wide spectrum. How do you get someone motivated to kill themselves?" he said. "Just because we loathe him doesn't mean we should ignore him."

Once the enemy is identified, the government must integrate all the tools of American power including law enforcement, foreign aid, military action, border security and intelligence.

There was a breakdown in communication on Sept. 11, 2001, between intelligence agencies which prevented such integration. Different agents knew about the 9/11 pilots and allowed them to train in flight schools and cross back and forth between borders.

"We had an opportunity to stop them and we didn't. We couldn't. We failed," he said.

International cooperation is also essential for reducing terrorism, especially with 1.3 billion Muslims around

TV news anchors to speak in lecture series

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two prominent TV news personalities will speak at K-State this semester in the continuation of the Landon Lecture series.

Jim Lehrer, anchor of "The NewsHour with Jim Lehrer" on PBS, will speak at 10:30 a.m. Monday in McCain Auditorium.

Lehrer, a Wichita native, served in the U.S. Marine Corps and then worked at a Dallas newspaper for 10 years.

The NewsHour was the first 60-minute evening news program when it first aired in 1983. Lehrer has moderated 10 nationally televised candidate debates in the last five presidential elections.

NBC Nightly News anchor Brian Williams will also deliver a lecture at 9:30 a.m. on May 3 in McCain Auditorium.

Williams, who took over Tom Brokaw's job in December, has covered the Iraqi elections, the 2004 presidential race and the Asian tsunami. He was also NBC's White House correspondent and went on almost every foreign and domestic trip with former President Bill Clinton.

"His firsthand experiences with the newsmakers and news events of today should provide for an interesting lecture," Charles Reagan, chair of the lecture series, said in a news release.

The lectures are free and open to the public.

Regents universities receiving less funding from state

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

State funding for K-State and other Regents universities is shrinking in more ways than one.

As the amount of money has declined, the state's share of the universities' budgets has fallen dramatically. Students plug the gap by paying more in tuition, but at K-State, some projects are being left unfunded, campus administrators said.

During the 2001-02 school year, K-State received 77 percent of its general funding from the state. This year, it is receiving just 55.6 percent of funding from the state.

Similarly, the University of Kansas' state funding has dropped from 63 percent in 2001-02 to 47 percent this year.

The Kansas Board of Regents has imposed a five-year plan on all Regents schools, which began in the 2002-03 school year. Tom Rawson, financial director for K-State, said the board met with each college to decide on how the plan should work.

"Initially the plan was to use additional tuition revenue to improve things around campus such as instructional technology and faculty salaries," said Bruce Shubert, assistant financial director for K-State.

But then state funding declined, and Shubert said the plan was not able to do everything it was meant to.

"Unfortunately, in the last few years, there's been some tough funding situations from the state. We were still able to make progress in some areas, but not as much as we would have liked," he said.

Lindy Eakin, vice-provost for administration and finance at KU, said the percentages look worse than the numbers. In the last three years, KU has lost $2 million from the general fund, but gained $55 million from tuition.

Eakin said KU is on a five-year plan similar to K-State's. The plan is to maintain the budget during times of high inflation.

"In the end, the plan will create $52 million of new money to apply to need-based financial aid and to hire new staff. It's to move the institution forward,"

2 men arrested for sex offenses with minors

By Nathan Dorsett
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two area residents were arrested for sex offenses against underage victims Monday.

Oliver Collins, 30, of 1930 Beck St., was arrested under suspicion of aggravated indecencies with a child. The offense is a felony charge.

The 14-year-old victim reported the crime to the police two weeks after the offense allegedly took place in northeast Manhattan, according to Captain Gary R. Grubbs.

"The victim knew the perpetrator and had sex with him," said Police Lieutenant Michael Quintanar.

Collins was charged with the same offense in June of 1998, according to the KBI's registered offender list.

He is being held in the Riley County Jail with bail set at $25,000.

Michael Ryff, 43, 826 Hawk Road, Hope, Kansas, was arrested under suspicion of the same crime as Collins with an added rape charge. Both are felony charges.

Ryff is being held in the Riley County Jail in lieu of $15,000 bond, Quintanar said.

Ryff doesn't have a history of sexual offenses, according to the KBI's registered offender list.

Senator Roberts pleased with Fort Riley

By Cynthia Hoffman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansas has quality military bases that play a valuable role in the national security of the United States, Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., said Tuesday at a Fort Riley news conference.

Roberts arrived in Kansas Tuesday and escorted Lt. Gen. James J. Lovelace Jr. on a tour of Fort Riley's facilities. Lovelace is the director of the army staff, and this was his first trip to the base.

Roberts said Lovelace is taking a hard look at all bases in evaluation for the base realignment and closure a process the U.S. Department of Defense uses to reorganize its military installations to more effectively and efficient.

The senator said he could make a difference because Lovelace helps decide whether or not funds will be spent on a federal basis. He also said he is confident in the Kansas military bases BRAC evaluation.

136th Landon Lecture

Reducing risk

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There is still work to be done before Americans are safe from another terrorist attack.

"We might not be able to eliminate terrorism but we can certainly reduce the risks," Lee Hamilton, vice chair of the 9/11 Commission, said.

Hamilton, a former Indiana Congressman, delivered the 136th Landon Lecture Tuesday in McCain Auditorium.

He outlined four steps to increase success in the War on Terror.

First, the threat must be identified. Hamilton said Osama bin Laden is most likely not calling the shots but the greatest threat could be radical Islamic groups who were inspired by al-Qaeda.

"That will menace Americans long after bin Laden has left the scene," Hamilton said.

He said he has developed a certain amount of respect for bin Laden because he was able to organize 19 men for a mission at a cost of $500,000.

"He appeals to a wide spectrum. How do you get someone motivated to kill themselves?" he said. "Just because we loathe him doesn't mean we should ignore him."

Once the enemy is identified, the government must integrate all the tools of American power including law enforcement, foreign aid, military action, border security and intelligence.

There was a breakdown in communication on Sept. 11, 2001, between intelligence agencies which prevented such integration. Different agents knew about the 9/11 pilots and allowed them to train in flight schools and cross back and forth between borders.

"We had an opportunity to stop them and we didn't. We couldn't. We failed," he said.

International cooperation is also essential for reducing terrorism, especially with 1.3 billion Muslims around

TV news anchors to speak in lecture series

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two prominent TV news personalities will speak at K-State this semester in the continuation of the Landon Lecture series.

Jim Lehrer, anchor of "The NewsHour with Jim Lehrer" on PBS, will speak at 10:30 a.m. Monday in McCain Auditorium.

Lehrer, a Wichita native, served in the U.S. Marine Corps and then worked at a Dallas newspaper for 10 years.

The NewsHour was the first 60-minute evening news program when it first aired in 1983. Lehrer has moderated 10 nationally televised candidate debates in the last five presidential elections.

NBC Nightly News anchor Brian Williams will also deliver a lecture at 9:30 a.m. on May 3 in McCain Auditorium.

Williams, who took over Tom Brokaw's job in December, has covered the Iraqi elections, the 2004 presidential race and the Asian tsunami. He was also NBC's White House correspondent and went on almost every foreign and domestic trip with former President Bill Clinton.

"His firsthand experiences with the newsmakers and news events of today should provide for an interesting lecture," Charles Reagan, chair of the lecture series, said in a news release.

The lectures are free and open to the public.

Regents universities receiving less funding from state

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

State funding for K-State and other Regents universities is shrinking in more ways than one.

As the amount of money has declined, the state's share of the universities' budgets has fallen dramatically. Students plug the gap by paying more in tuition, but at K-State, some projects are being left unfunded, campus administrators said.

During the 2001-02 school year, K-State received 77 percent of its general funding from the state. This year, it is receiving just 55.6 percent of funding from the state.

Similarly, the University of Kansas' state funding has dropped from 63 percent in 2001-02 to 47 percent this year.

The Kansas Board of Regents has imposed a five-year plan on all Regents schools, which began in the 2002-03 school year. Tom Rawson, financial director for K-State, said the board met with each college to decide on how the plan should work.

"Initially the plan was to use additional tuition revenue to improve things around campus such as instructional technology and faculty salaries," said Bruce Shubert, assistant financial director for K-State.

But then state funding declined, and Shubert said the plan was not able to do everything it was meant to.

"Unfortunately, in the last few years, there's been some tough funding situations from the state. We were still able to make progress in some areas, but not as much as we would have liked," he said.

Lindy Eakin, vice-provost for administration and finance at KU, said the percentages look worse than the numbers. In the last three years, KU has lost $2 million from the general fund, but gained $55 million from tuition.

Eakin said KU is on a five-year plan similar to K-State's. The plan is to maintain the budget during times of high inflation.

"In the end, the plan will create $52 million of new money to apply to need-based financial aid and to hire new staff. It's to move the institution forward,"

2 men arrested for sex offenses with minors

By Nathan Dorsett
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two area residents were arrested for sex offenses against underage victims Monday.

Oliver Collins, 30, of 1930 Beck St., was arrested under suspicion of aggravated indecencies with a child. The offense is a felony charge.

The 14-year-old victim reported the crime to the police two weeks after the offense allegedly took place in northeast Manhattan, according to Captain Gary R. Grubbs.

"The victim knew the perpetrator and had sex with him," said Police Lieutenant Michael Quintanar.

Collins was charged with the same offense in June of 1998, according to the KBI's registered offender list.

He is being held in the Riley County Jail with bail set at $25,000.

Michael Ryff, 43, 826 Hawk Road, Hope, Kansas, was arrested under suspicion of the same crime as Collins with an added rape charge. Both are felony charges.

Ryff is being held in the Riley County Jail in lieu of $15,000 bond, Quintanar said.

Ryff doesn't have a history of sexual offenses, according to the KBI's registered offender list.

Senator Roberts pleased with Fort Riley

By Cynthia Hoffman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansas has quality military bases that play a valuable role in the national security of the United States, Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., said Tuesday at a Fort Riley news conference.

Roberts arrived in Kansas Tuesday and escorted Lt. Gen. James J. Lovelace Jr. on a tour of Fort Riley's facilities. Lovelace is the director of the army staff, and this was his first trip to the base.

Roberts said Lovelace is taking a hard look at all bases in evaluation for the base realignment and closure a process the U.S. Department of Defense uses to reorganize its military installations to more effectively and efficient.

The senator said he could make a difference because Lovelace helps decide whether or not funds will be spent on a federal basis. He also said he is confident in the Kansas military bases BRAC evaluation.

Entrepreneur creates drinking buddy doll

Illustrations by Brandon Brewster | COLLEGIAN

Never drink alone again.

I.M. Happy will always be there to throw back a beer or two, or six, with you.

Happy, who sits on his barstool, is a new doll with four different cycles of humorous sayings and catchy drinking songs.

Happy is a balding, pot-bellied character complete with a plumber's crack peeking out of his jeans. Happy's shirt displays his name on the front and "Drink up!" on the back.

Happy has one heavy eye and has drool hanging out of his mouth.

Rather than wasting beer, Happy will take a fake swig out of his plastic beer mug while singing his songs, said Mickey Marchello, creator of the doll.

"I came up with this idea because of a song," Marchello said. "That is how I developed the doll."

The song "World Party Anthem," written by Marchello, is the main tune Happy sings. Marchello said the upbeat song is about beer.

"I was trying to find a way to move this song," Marchello said.

Happy will initially be sold for $34.95 only through the Web site www.57happy.com until it gains further popularity.

BOSTON U. STUDENT STARTS EROTIC MAGAZINE ON CAMPUS

This fall, on college campuses all across America, students tried out for a plethora of different activities.

At the University of Virginia, they ranged from club sports teams to the University Guides Service. At Boston University this fall, despite the consternation of BU administrators, 85 students came to try out for an activity of a different sort – the opportunity to pose in Boink Magazine.

Fifteen were given the nod and posed nude in the first issue, which appeared Feb. 17.

The resulting Boink Magazine, subtitled "the college guide to carnal knowledge," includes 15 models in various types of pictorials: male and female, with both heterosexual and homosexual sex acts.

The magazine includes articles such as "The straight girls' guide to sleeping with chicks," "Sex in the city" and "Virginity, not purity," among other salacious reads.

"Our [magazine] is porn," said Alecia Oleyourrk, a Boston University senior who is founder, editor-in-chief and a model for the upstart magazine. "It's meant to arouse; it's meant to excite."

Boink Magazine's first run included a target distribution of 20,000 magazines, to be sold on the Internet and throughout Boston, despite BU officials discouraging local vendors from selling the magazine.

The issue was the product of a staff of 25 writers and three photographers. The magazine sells for $7.95 on the newsstand and $20 annually, according to Anderson.

4 students named Goldwater Scholarship winners

$7,500 scholarships awarded to science, math and engineering students who excel in their field

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Four K-State students have recently been named Goldwater Scholarship recipients. The $7,500 scholarship for excellence in math, science and engineering has been awarded to David Thompson, Mike Higgins, Meg Fasulo and Matt Basel.

These students join the 49 K-State students who have received a Goldwater Scholarship since the program began in 1989.

James Hohenbary, scholarship adviser, said K-State's tradition of Goldwater winners is due to the students and professors that work together to strive for success.

"One thing that successful Goldwater scholars have in common is a real interest in learning and taking upper-level courses," Hohenbary said. "They're not necessarily doing the minimum to complete their curriculum."

Thompson, from Burlingame, is a senior in electrical engineering with an emphasis in biomedical engineering and minors in physics and Japanese. The K-State honors list student said he is planning to earn his doctorate in biomedical engineering and possibly work in a university setting.

Tim Bolton, physics professor, is currently working with Thompson on neutrino oscillation research, but Bolton said Thompson is more than just a smart kid.

"He's always reading books," Bolton said. "When he's walking to class, he always has his book because he never wants to waste time."

Higgins, from Manhattan, is a senior in mathematics and statistics. He said he is looking to earn his doctorate in mathematics or statistics and possibly conduct research at a university setting in topology, analysis, linear models and probability theory.

Higgns is a K-State Putnam, Mathematics and Statistics Team scholarship recipient and is also a member of Pi Mu Epsilon, the honorary mathematics society. He is currently working on research with David Yetter, professor of mathematics.

Fasulo, from Olathe, is a senior in chemistry, biochemistry and microbiology. A Howard Hughes Medical Institute Undergraduate Research Scholar, Fasulo said she plans to earn her doctorate in supramolecular chemistry, and later teach and research in a university. She is also a K-State honors list student and a member of Phi Kappa Phi, the chemistry fraternity Alpha Chi Sigma and the Golden Key Honor Society.

She is currently working on supramolecular chemistry research under the supervision of Christer Aakeroy, associate professor of chemistry.

Basel, from Overland Park, is a sophomore in chemistry, and said he is hoping to earn his doctorate in analytical chemistry and biochemistry and eventually work in a pharmaceutical and biotechnology firm or conducting basic research at a university.

Basel is a K-State Putnam Scholarship recipient as well as a King Scholarship recipient through the department of chemistry. An honors list student, he is also been a leader with Awana and the Boy Scouts of America.

Basel is currently working on analytical chemistry and material science research with Maryanne Collinson, associate professor of chemistry.

"What I liked a lot about him is that he thinks," Collinson said. "He bounces ideas off of me, I bounce ideas off of him and we begin to think – and thinking is good."

Udall winner named

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State has another Udall Scholarship winner.

Trisha Culbertson, senior in biological agricultural engineering, became the 13th winner of the $5,000 scholarship K-State has had since the scholarship was instated in 1992.

The scholarship, which honors Morris K. Udall, is to raise awareness in environmental issues, as well as Native American and Alaskan issues. There are 80 winners each year who receive $5,000 and 35 honorable mention winners who receive $350.

In past years, the scholarship has had over 500 nominees from over 250 institutions in the United States.

Jim Hohenbary, scholarship adviser, said the application process is lengthy, and involves a paper application and several essays. The longest essay is about a significant speech or legislative act Udall supported and how it relates to the student's career interests.

Culbertson had received honorable mention for the scholarship in 2001. She said it was worth the process because it's such an honor.

"It's a pretty huge honor. It was my third time to apply. I originally wasn't going to apply but Hohenbary talked me into it. It was worth the work," Culbertson said.

Culbertson, who will be a fifth-year senior next year, plans to use the money for school. She is currently planning to get her master's degree here at K-State, and then she will look toward her doctoral degree.

"I'm looking at a research-oriented position. I want to work with national treatment systems for water quality improvement," she said.

Hohenbary said the university is honored that Culbertson was selected to receive the scholarship.

"To have one of those individuals to be from K-State is just great," Hohenbary said.

Hohenbary said Culbertson's achievement reflects on both the school and the student.

"It tends to speak to the quality of opportunities the school is offering. It distinguished her in a very competitive field," he said.

While at K-State, Culbertson was an academic All-American for cross country and ran for the track team. She is in Tau Beta Phi, serves on the Student Athlete Advisory Council, and is a member of the K-State Chapter of the American Society of Agriculture Engineers.

Caffeinated beer combines alertness, relaxation

Relax? Or stay up all night?

Now beer drinkers can do both with Anheuser-Busch's new release, B{+E}, said "B to the E."

This new beverage takes beer and adds caffeine, guarana, ginseng and berry aromas.

Sold in 10-ounce cans, B{+E} contains 6.6 percent alcohol by volume, according to an Anheuser-Busch press release.

With 54 milligrams of caffeine, B{+E} joins other caffeinated beers on the market, including MoonShot, Third Rail and Sparks, according to www.washingtonpost.com.

"It is supposed to be an energy drink," Aaron Koehn, bartender at Rusty's Last Chance, said.

Bill Arck, Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service director at K-State, said caffeinated beer is a business proposition.

"It's the beer industry's response to people doing Red Bull and drinking beer," he said.

However, B{+E} hasn't developed a following just yet.

Brad Klein, Kite's Bar and Grill employee, said Kite's has sold about a case to customers.

Ashley Jacobs, junior in textiles, has tried B{+E} a few times.

"It's sweeter than a normal beer," she said.

The caffeine, however, may make the effects of B{+E} on consumers different than those of regular beer.

According to the Office of Alcohol and Drug Education at the University of Notre Dame, mixing caffeine and alcohol can result in severe dehydration, a higher probability of hangovers, and a longer drinking time because the caffeine keeps the consumer awake.

TO THE POINT

Agencies need to improve communication

The final report by the 9/11 Commission stated that the United States' leaders did not have the imagination to conceive of the devastating threats that terrorism posed to the nation.

When Lee Hamilton, vice-chair of the 9/11 Commission, presented the Landon Lecture Tuesday, he recommended further coordination between the United States' 15 intelligence agencies

Those agencies, including the FBI and CIA, have yet to come together and function as cohesive organizations.

Hamilton spoke about many of the areas in which America's intelligence community is weak.

The 9/11 Commission report made many recommendations for reform within the intelligence community including more organized oversight of homeland security and creation of the position of Director of National Intelligence.

Understandably, caution should be exercised in implementing the many reforms approved by Congress and the President, but now that Bush has nominated John Negroponte as the first DNI, it is time for our intelligence services to come together to work as one in protecting U.S. interests.

Terrorism prevention measures may never be 100 percent successful, but only by coordinating their efforts can our intelligence agencies can we hope to prevent future attacks on the United States.

Casting the cane aside

Columnist reflects on her handicapped month after having surgery

JULIA STOSKOPF

No longer the accessory of choice for pimp-daddies or the necessity of older generations worldwide, a cane has functioned as my stick of stability for the last month, accompanied by a black walking cast (a.k.a. "the boot") that is anything but stylish.

The last month has been difficult, not only because of work, classes and activities, but also because of my new accessories. Thanks to the help and consideration of K-State students and faculty alike, I have learned a valuable lesson – just what it is like to be handicapped on a college campus.

My brief walk with the boot and cane is nothing compared to the daily lives of many handicapped students. My experience has given me just a glimpse of those lives and routines.

But no one should be more proud than K-State students and faculty. Their actions over this last month have proven just how friendly K-State is.

This winter break I discovered that I was blessed to have an extra bone in my foot. Yay for me, until doctors revealed that I had broken my extra bone. Twice.

Apparently, the soccer match in Spain last summer was too much for my extra bone, as was some unknown point last semester when I broke it again. The extra bone stressed a tendon and even caused my middle toe to go completely dead one night while exercising. The doctor decided, after attempting to let the bone heal itself, that surgery to remove it altogether was the next step.

So, before leaving the operating room last month, I strapped on my boot and started walking – sort of. The next week was my break, which I spent doing absolutely nothing, floating through my waking hours in a painkiller-induced coma.

Even before I left my apartment, K-State faculty and my friends demonstrated their worth by checking in, bringing notes, sending cards, calling and even making sure that I was covered for work.

When I returned to school, walking between classes was difficult. I only attempted to walk once from class at 10:30 a.m. in Weber Hall to class at 11:30 a.m. in Calvin Hall. A handicapped parking pass became an absolute necessity.

Despite the stares of some students, others helped me to discover the humor in my situation.

To the guy in Seaton Hall who told me, "Girl, I feel ya. Slow limpin' pimpin,' ": thanks for giving me a hilarious story to tell anyone who asked how people reacted to the cane.

To the friend yelling how sexy the boot was out the car window in Aggieville: thanks. I know.

To my coaches, teachers, friends and teammates: thank you for helping me stumble across campus, up stairs and down sidewalks. Without you, this month would have been a hundred times more stressful.

To my roommate, parents and fiancé who spent the month taking care of me: thanks for everything. I owe you big time – except for my fiancé, who still owes me for taking care of him after he broke his hand on Valentine's Day.

My brief state of being handicapped is almost over. By the time this is printed, I will have surrendered my boot and relocated my right shoes that have disappeared into the depths of my closet. But my experience taught me more than where the best handicapped parking places are on campus. For the short time I spent as a handicapped student at K-State, I also learned the difficulties of being handicapped, even if it was just temporarily.

K-State and Manhattan should be proud of the way they treat the handicapped – with respect and consideration.

Pursuit of better life leaves some immigrants disillusioned

DAVID LIANG

A couple of feet away from the main entrance of the Comfort Inn hotel, a middle-aged Asian man sporting a worn suede jacket and faded jeans leaned against his minivan cab while puffing a cigarette. His price for a one-way trip downtown: $20.

It was exactly one week into the New Year and I was in San Francisco for a long-deserved vacation. My destination that morning was Pier 39 where I would take a ferry to the infamous Alcatraz prison, otherwise known as "The Rock." Since my last experiment with a major public transportation system (the New York underground) had gone seriously awry, I decided to go with the cab this time.

Once under way, we struck up a conversation. I learned that my driver's name was John Tsung. Originally from Hong Kong, John – like countless other immigrants – had come to America in search of a better life.

Curious to learn more about his experience as a first-generation immigrant, I asked him about how he felt living in California. His response was surprising.

"You know, I think coming to America was the worst mistake of my life," he said in Mandarin. "I simply shouldn't have left Hong Kong."

John told me about his lofty dreams of getting rich in the "land of opportunity." Television, it seems, had brainwashed him into believing that unlike elsewhere in the world, immigrants in the United States were impervious to failure as long as they tried hard enough.

Upon arrival, John's poor command of English was a serious hindrance to everyday life. Racial discrimination compounded problems (which startled me, given California's relatively large Asian population), and he was forced to live in an isolated ethnic enclave with other less-educated immigrants from mainland China. It was only after an extended period of tedious networking did he manage to obtain a job as a taxi driver. Through the years, his dreams of making it big were crushed by reality's heavy hand. To this day he struggles just to make ends meet. But John's greatest disappointment in the United States was democracy.

"Americans are always quick to boast to the world about their democratic government," he said, taking a tentative glance at me through his rearview mirror. "But it's nothing. In Hong Kong, I was just as free to do anything I wanted. "America's democracy is a place where everyone wants to talk, but no one wants to listen." he said. And for penniless immigrants like me, we have no voice at all."

The minivan passed an overhead freeway. From there, we had a scenic view of the city outskirts. "You see those houses over there? My family lives in one of those," John said, pointing at sprawl of gaudy-colored hovels that carpeted the hills.

As we entered the city limits, a new landscape greeted us. Lots of tall buildings, neatly pruned trees and well-dressed businessmen.

Our dialogue ended as we arrived at Pier 39. I gave John a $20 bill plus tip, and with that, he sped off in search of his next customer.

The American dream never did promise green fertile fields or gold-paved streets, but it did promise equal opportunity for all.

And while many immigrants have seized the opportunity, John's case was a reflection of the growing chasm between the newly rich and the newly poor, as well as a painful reminder that not all those who seek the American Dream find it.

How could a basketball team with only five scholarship players beat KU on the first try, while K-State — with over a dozen players on scholarship — couldn't beat them in three tries this season?

With all the new mulching on campus, I felt like a hamster in a really big cage.

Hats off to Tim Weiser for having the guts to tell Wefald what all of the other athletic directors working under the Wef' have experienced and why they left. Besides, Jon, you look like an idiot chasing after the players on the field trying to love up on them. You'd better hope they don't mistake you for a bug and step on you.

I love how it gets warm and sunny just as soon as we get back from spring break. Way to go, Zeus.

High schoolers get on the Facebook because they have class at K-State. Duh.

Is it just me, or does the basement of Seaton Hall smell like sweat? Hmmm, strange.

You know you're unpopular if the psychic on the psychic hotline hangs up on you.

There's a psycho with a pink bag in the Goodnow laundry room, and she's making me kind of afraid to leave my laundry here unattended.

The psycho with the pink laundry bag is now on the phone screaming about the other psychos in the laundry room.

I just wondered why all the men were so afraid of admitting they were Boy Scouts. I mean, I was a Wolf Badge.

Music, fireworks highlight Manhattan's anniversary

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Celebrate 150! Committee is planning a festival, to commemorate Manhattan's sesquicentennial June 3-5 in City Park.

One of the main events will be a concert by rock group Sha Na Na, who appeared in the movie "Grease".

"We really wanted an act with a big name," Angie Reed, public relations chair, said.

The committee worked with Melanie Godsey, director of recreation for the Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department, to get the concert.

"We're doing this concert in conjunction with the kickoff of our Arts in the Park concert series," Godsey said. "Since the committee was able to put some money toward it, we were able to bring in a big name."

Godsey said she expects the group to perform lots of oldies and cover songs.

The concert will be June 4 at 8 p.m. and will be followed by fireworks.

"I'm really looking forward to the fireworks show," Godsey said. "It will probably be one of the biggest in Manhattan, and it will be right in the park, right in everyone's faces."

Godsey said Western Enterprises out of Oklahoma, the company that does fireworks for Purple Power Play on Poyntz, is doing the fireworks.

Reed said they also plan to have a smaller stage with local acts.

That same morning, a parade will go from Manhattan Town Center to the park at 10 a.m.

"That day, we'll have all kinds of vendors, roving historical re-enactors, and activities for kids," Reed said.

On June 3, residents can enjoy a free picnic in the park, and on June 5, there will be free swimming and a baseball game.

"It's just a full weekend of activities," Reed said.

She said they're still looking for help from sponsors, though the city commission recently gave the committee $50,000.

"Anything helps, considering we started with a budget of $0," Reed said.

She said the committee tried to plan events that appealed to every demographic.

"It really is a once-in-a-lifetime event," Reed said. "Manhattan only turns 150 once."

$7.5 million road project begins

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A $7.5 million road construction project is underway at the interchange of Fort Riley Boulevard and Seth Child Road.

Kevin Schorzman, area engineer for the Kansas Department of Transportation, said the construction should be finished by fall 2006.

Instead of the circular on- and off-ramps on the south side of Fort Riley, straighter or diamond-shaped ramps will replace them.

Construction is causing two lanes to be narrowed into one at the interchange, but drivers will be able to access Seth Child from Fort Riley and vice versa.

"I'm sure that there's going to be traffic delays," Schorzman said.

"Access should be maintained just like it is now through the whole process."

B G Consultants of Manhattan won the bid for the project, Robert Ott, city engineer for Manhattan, said.

Ott said it is being funded by federal and state dollars.

Jeff Hancock, director of public works for Manhattan, said the construction of the ramps and planning for the projects is handled mainly through KDOT.

Projects handled through Manhattan usually don't begin until summer, after K-State's spring semester is over.

"We're kind of on the back burner until summer right now," he said.

The main project this summer will put a sealant on paved roads, Ott said.

"It's going to preserve the condition of the pavement by sealing the streets.

"This is a maintenance technique," he said. "It's keeping that water out of there."

Bush offers prayers for quake victims

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

President Bush offered the help and prayers of the United States Tuesday to victims of an Indian Ocean earthquake that saw Ihdonesia battered for the second time in three months.

"On behalf of the American people, Laura and I offer our condolences to the victims of yesterday's earthquake in Indonesia," Bush said as he opened a speech on Iraq in the White House's Rose Garden. "The people of Indonesia can know as well that they have our prayers and that our government is ready to assist."

Bush said that U.S. officials, already in the region helping with the recovery from another earthquake and resulting tsunami, are moving quickly to offer assistance and gather information on what relief aid is needed.

The 8.7-magnitude quake hit off Indonesia's Nias Island Tuesday, triggering tsunami fears and killing at least 330 people. The even bigger quake three months ago sent waves crashing into coastlines all around the Indian Ocean, killing at least 174,000 people.

Bush's quick and public response to the new quake was in sharp contrast with his reaction to the Dec. 26 earthquake and tsunami. Then, he was criticized for responding slowly and with too little money, waiting three days to make his first personal comments.

Eventually, Bush asked for $950 million in relief assistance for tsunami victims.

K-State 6, Wichita State 5

Shocked 'em

Wildcats upset 21st-ranked Wichita State Shockers

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Excuse K-State Head Coach Brad Hill if his grin is a little bigger.

After watching his Wildcat baseball team upset No. 21 Wichita State 6-5 Tuesday night, Hill was all smiles, as his team used timely hitting and key defensive stops to steal the close victory.

After a weekend series against Missouri in which the Wildcats committed eight errors and scored just eight runs, Hill said he was glad to pull out the win.

"It hasn't gone our way," Hill said of the season so far. "Maybe this is something that will springboard us into having the confidence to where if something doesn't go our way, we can play through it and be successful."

The win for the Wildcats, in front of 1,824 fans, was their first over the Shockers since 1997, and broke a nine-game losing streak overall to Wichita State. After last season's 16-inning 12-7 Shocker win in Manhattan, senior Terry Blunt said winning the close game was special.

"It was awesome," Blunt said. "Being the third year that I've played these guys and being from Wichita, just makes it extra special."

The Shockers broke a scoreless tie in the second inning, when Brian Spear smacked a double to right field, scoring Joe Muich and Phil Napolitan to give the Shockers the early 2-0 lead.

The Wildcats answered in the bottom of the inning, as junior Barrett Rice scored when junior Eric Eymann singled up the middle to make it 2-1.

In the fourth, Wichita State scored again to push its lead to 3-1. Napolitan got his second hit of the game on a single to left field, and scored from second when right-fielder Matt Brown singled to right.

But K-State came roaring back in the bottom of the inning.

After junior Joe Roundy walked, and Rice hit a single into center, a single by David Baker and an error by Shocker Nick McCoola allowed Roundy to score to pull K-State to within one run at 3-2.

Blunt then tapped a single in front of Wichita State's Blake Hurlbutt, which scored Rice and Baker, giving the Wildcats their first lead of the game at 4-3.

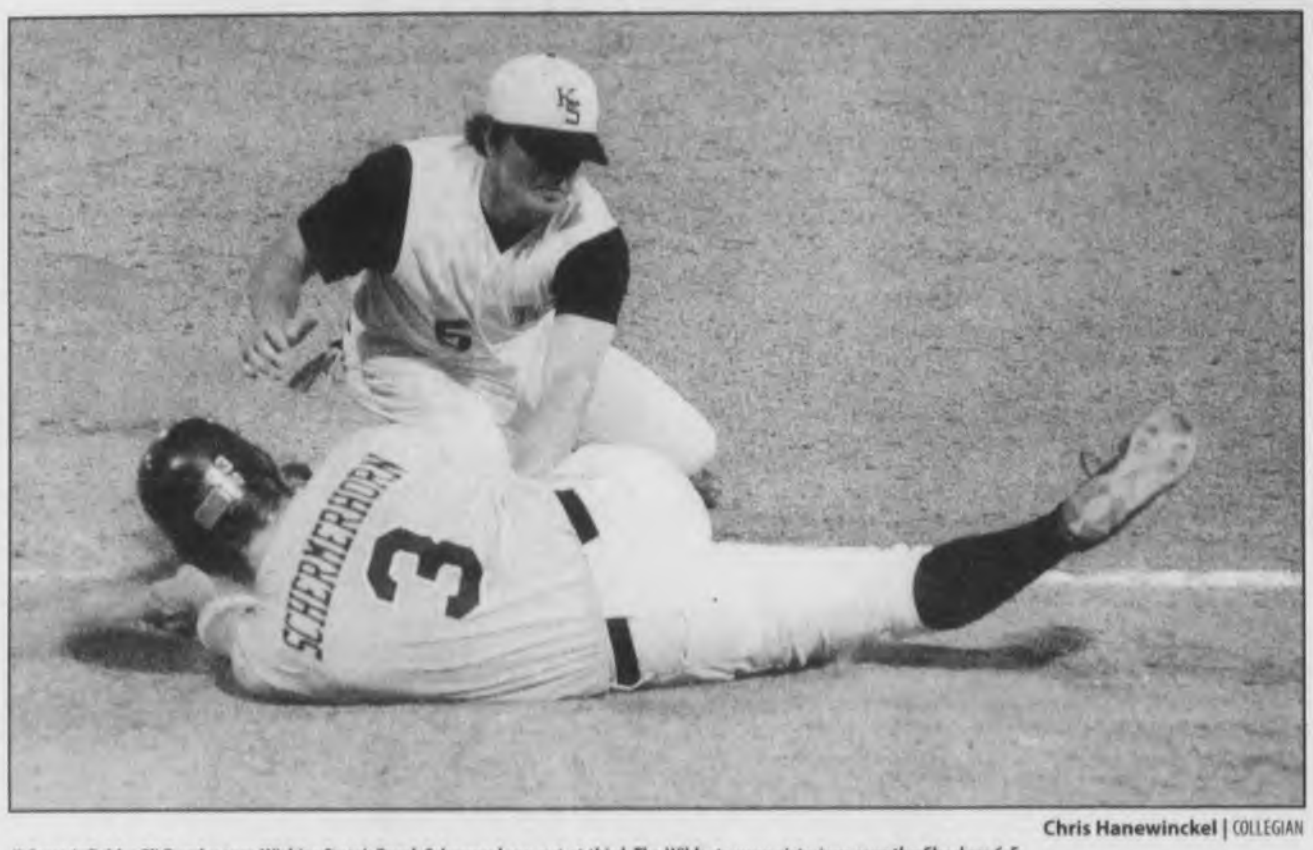
Blunt said he was proud of the way the team played within its capabilities.

"Coach Hill has been telling us when ballgames get tight like that, we've got to keep our composure," Blunt said. "It seems, lately, we've had a couple games down the stretch where guys have been pressing a little bit.

K-State extended its lead to 5-3 in the sixth inning when senior Steve Murphy drove in junior Eric Durante. The Shockers then scored once in the seventh and eighth innings to tie the game at 5-5.

In the bottom of the eighth, K-State pushed across the deciding run when Baker singled to right, scoring Roundy.

Hill said Baker's hitting has made a difference for his team this season.



"David Baker, he's a guy who gives us pretty solid efforts every time out," Hill said. "He's a very good catcher, and some people don't give him enough credit for how well he swings the bat."

In the ninth, K-State retired the Wichita State batters in order, including an impressive out at first base by Rice, who snagged a ball out of the dirt to record the inning's second out.

After the loss, Shocker head coach Gene Stephenson was complimentary of the K-State effort.

"I will say this: they got the hits – the clutch hits – when they needed to off some pretty good pitches," he said. "My hats off to Kansas State. They played hard. They played well."

Brian Peterson picked up the win for the Wildcats after 1.1 innings of work, striking out one and giving up no hits. Peterson improved to 1-0 on the season. Noah Booth (2-3) took the loss after going 1.0 inning, giving up one run on two hits.

Staff Reports

NFL | Steelers re-sign former K-State lineman

NFL veteran and former K-State offensive lineman Barrett Brooks signed a one-year contract with the Pittsburgh Steelers on Monday. The team did not release financial terms.

Brooks

Entering his 11th season in 2005 after originally signing with the Steelers on Oct. 22, 2003, Brooks played in five games with the Steelers as a backup lineman in 2004. He has played in 102 games and made 62 starts during his career after originally being selected by the Philadelphia Eagles in the second round of the 1995 NFL Draft.

Brooks has played for six teams in NFL career, including stops with the Detroit Lions (1999-00) and New York Giants (2003). Brooks played at K-State from 1991-94.

NFL | Carter re-signs with Cleveland Browns

The Cleveland Browns re-signed former K-State defensive back Dyshod Carter to a one-year contract on Monday.

Carter

Carter played in the final five regular season games for the Browns as a cornerback, and also played on special teams.

He recorded five tackles, one forced fumble and one recovered fumble.

Carter was originally drafted by the Browns in 2001, and his career includes stays with the New England Patriots (2003) and the Arizona Cardinals (2004).

CBB | Massey invited to play in Portsmouth Invitational

K-State senior forward Jeremiah Massey recently received one of 64 invitations to the prestigious Portsmouth Invitational Tournament, to be played April 6-9 at Churchland High School in Portsmouth, Va.

Massey

The Portsmouth Invitational is one of the preeminent NBA pre-draft camps, and the only postseason event prior to the Chicago Draft camp. About 200 NBA representatives will attend the four-day event, which will consist of 11 games, with the 64 invited college seniors playing on eight teams of eight players.

This season, Massey, a native of Detroit, averaged a team-best 17.9 points on 50.3 percent shooting (176-of-350) with a team-high 6.9 rebounds, 1.8 assists, 1.5 steals and 0.4 blocks in 31.9 minutes per game. His scoring average was the highest by a Wildcat since Askia Jones averaged 22.1 points during the 1993-94 season.

FOOTBALL

Team hopes to rebound from 2004 season

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This winter, while most of Manhattan was tucked in bed, a group of individuals were at work, far from a comfort zone.

At 5:30 a.m., the K-State football team was participating in winter workouts.

Tuesday afternoon, several players spoke of an increased emphasis on work ethic, as the Wildcats try to rebound from a 4-7 season in 2004 – the first time since 1992 the Wildcats failed to play in a bowl game.

"It was rough, but I think we all had the right state of mind," said senior right tackle Jeromey Clary of the workouts and their start time that went from 6 a.m. to 5:30 a.m. over the course of the winter. "We weren't focused on the present, we were focused on the future. We knew if we made it through it, we were going to be a hell of a lot tougher than we were last year. I think that's where we're at right now."

Junior quarterback Allen Webb said he agreed with Clary.

"With a 4-7 season last year, you don't have time to be mad about waking up," Webb said. "You've got to do whatever it takes."

Today marks the start of spring practice for Coach Bill Snyder and the Wildcats, with a very clear mission of improvement for a team that won a Big 12 Conference Championship and played in a BCS bowl game just two seasons ago.

Snyder, entering his 17th season as head coach, said his players needed to get better in several areas following last season.

"I thought we needed to become a more disciplined football team, and I still do," Snyder said. "I thought we needed to be a harder working football team, a more dedicated football team, and I think we've made headway in all of those things.

"I thought we needed to be a more spirited, enthusiastic football team that had a significant number of young the Wildcats, who return seven starters on both sides of the ball.

Despite several veterans, pick almost any position, and there's doubt.

From the battle between Webb, junior Dylan Meier and redshirt-freshman Allan Evridge for the starting quarterback spot, to the question of who will replace running back Darren Sproles, the school's all-time leader in rushing and all-purpose yards, there is much uncertainty as to who will emerge as starters and leaders on the team.

Snyder said he likes the fact that very few positions have clear favorites to start.

"With this football team, I don't see that as anything except a very positive position for us," Snyder said. "If you have that kind of competition per position, that tells you you'll probably have greater depth and that's always a plus."

Even with uncertainty surrounding the quarterback, running back and the offensive line –

Football team focuses on future with new attitude

ANTHONY MENDOZA

Junior running back Thomas Clayton said it all when he walked out of the hallway and through the doors to a pack of reporters waiting for him on Tuesday afternoon at the Vanier Football Complex.

He didn't bust out and talk at the quarterback position going into this season.

Clayton didn't say a word. He did not need to.

His outfit did the talking for him.

Dressed in camouflage shorts and a black tank top, which showed off his multiple tattoos, it signaled something different for the program. A new era of football at K-State that can't live on the previous years' greatness like it did last year, but a team with something to prove.

"Right now, we're focusing on the future. We knew if we made it through it, we were going to be a hell of a lot tougher than we were last year. I think that's where we're at right now."

Junior quarterback Allen Webb said he agreed with Clary.

"With a 4-7 season last year, you don't have time to be mad about waking up," Webb said. "You've got to do whatever it takes."

Today marks the start of spring practice for Coach Bill Snyder and the Wildcats, with a very clear mission of improvement for a team that won a Big 12 Conference Championship and played in a BCS bowl game just two seasons ago.

Snyder, entering his 17th season as head coach, said his players needed to get better in several areas following last season.

"I thought we needed to become a more disciplined football team, and I still do," Snyder said. "I thought we needed to be a harder working football team, a more dedicated football team, and I think we've made headway in all of those things.

"I thought we needed to be a more spirited, enthusiastic football team that had a significant number of young the Wildcats, who return seven starters on both sides of the ball.

Despite several veterans, pick almost any position, and there's doubt.

From the battle between Webb, junior Dylan Meier and redshirt-freshman Allan Evridge for the starting quarterback spot, to the question of who will replace running back Darren Sproles, the school's all-time leader in rushing and all-purpose yards, there is much uncertainty as to who will emerge as starters and leaders on the team.

Snyder said he likes the fact that very few positions have clear favorites to start.

"With this football team, I don't see that as anything except a very positive position for us," Snyder said. "If you have that kind of competition per position, that tells you you'll probably have greater depth and that's always a plus."

Even with uncertainty surrounding the quarterback, running back and the offensive line – Snyder not saying who will start and where, is that this team, even with all the question marks on the offensive line and in the secondary, will be better than last year.

Good enough to get to a bowl game for the 12th time in 13 years.

When each player was asked about the attitude this year compared to the attitude of the team last year, they all had the same answer.

Sure it may be a scripted, "we're working harder than last year.

The way to get there is to follow Clayton's example, and put on the camouflage and be prepared for an uphill battle in non-conference and Big 12 Conference games.

If the Wildcats do that, not only will they earn the respect of the media and their opponents, but more importantly, the fans that did not show up to games, or the ones that found their way to the exits before the game ended during last year's dismal season.

Desperate for 'Housewives'

Scandals, suspense, plot twists attract more than just female viewers

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"Desperate Housewives," a popular Sunday night television show, has caught the attention of men and women of all ages.

The show is based on the lives of middle-aged housewife neighbors and their families. The everyday events of Wisteria Lane combine into a popular hour-long comedic soap opera each Sunday evening.

The main characters, the "housewives," are Susan Mayer, a single mother who's dating the attractive plumber across the street; Lynette Scavo, a woman who left her successful job in the work force to become a mother of four rambunctious children; Brie Van De Kamp, a woman whose once-perfect family is now breaking apart; and Gabriel Solis, a retired model and the wife of a rich businessman, who had her luxurious lifestyle interrupted and is now modeling again to make ends meet.

When the show started, each character's life seemed to be happy and conventional. However, as the season continued, dramatic and unexpected turns occurred that caused each woman to sink into a "desperate housewife" state. Each character's situation is unique but relatable. According to The TV Column at The Washington Post, Desperate Housewives recorded more than 24 million viewers after being off the air for five weeks. In fact, more than twice as many viewers chose to spend the night with "Housewives" instead of CBS's traditional Easter Sunday flick. Last weeks' episode beat the combined network competition including CBS, NBC, Fox and WB and was the most-watched program in the county on Easter Sunday.

Kelly Schmitt, junior in anthropology, has been married for three and a half years. She said she watches the show on occasion.

"You would have to be really rich and really bored or have way too many kids to be like that," Schmitt said.

Schmitt said she likes the show because of its drama and humor.

"It's an unusual scenario," she said.

She also said that she has tried to get her husband to watch the show, but he often loses interest after a few minutes and leaves.

David Gantz, freshman in electrical engineering, said that he has watched the show a few times and thought it was pretty interesting.

"The show is appealing to boys and girls," he said. "There are pretty good-looking women actresses."

He also said that he is drawn to the show's use of "real life situations that intervene between husbands, wives, neighbors and cheating."

According to an article in The Advocate, Mark Cherry, the show's director, has been involved in other situational comedies about women. They include "Designing Women," "The Golden Girls" and "The Five Mrs. Buchanans."

Cherry wanted "Desperate Housewives" to be similar to "Sex in the City" and "Six Feet Under," according to The Advocate. The article also stated that about 40 percent of the viewing audience is male.

Jessie Connell, sophomore in family studies and human services, said that she likes the show because it is scandalous and suspenseful with a witty and sarcastic tone.

"It appeals to different generations," Connell said.

Erin Hesse, sophomore in apparel marketing, said she agreed.

"It's appealing because it's not reality TV. It's a show that's totally made up," Hesse said.

"Desperate Housewives" trivia

- Wisteria Lane includes houses used numerous times throughout the years. Their names include the "Leave it to Beaver House" and the "Animal House." They have been moved and re-arranged and even destroyed and re-built numerous times since they were first bought by the city of Los Angeles.
- "Housewives" originally started off as a comedy pilot, and was rejected by every network including Lifetime and HBO. ABC expressed an interest, and it was retooled to its current format of a dark comedy/drama.
- Pamela Anderson was originally called for the role of Susan, but she turned it down.
- Teri Hatcher broke two ribs filming the scene where she stumbles into a wedding cake and insisted they not stop production.
- Oprah Winfrey loved the show so much, she was invited to the set and had an exclusive show in which she showcased a 15 minute "episode" where Oprah (as a new neighbor) learned of all the secrets of the housewives.
- Teri Hatcher is the first person to win the Screen Actors Guild Award for Outstanding Performance by a Female Actor in a Comedy Series for a show that has not yet completed its first season.
- "Housewives" is the first television series to win the Screen Actors Guild Award for Outstanding Performance by an Ensemble in a Comedy Series for a show that had not yet completed its first season.

Excuse for missing exam needs to be creative, original

ASK THE 5th YEAR

ADAM AKIN

Q: I have a test coming up that I am completely unprepared for. How can I get out of taking it?

A: I'm sure that we have all used some sort of excuse to get out of taking a test. Actually, I should say that I'm sure that you all have used some sort of excuse because I would never do something dishonest like that. If you have decided that you absolutely cannot take a certain test and you are going to make up an excuse, it has to be good. So let me give you some ideas.

We have all heard about telling an instructor that a relative has died and that you have to attend the funeral. This does work from time to time, but there is always the chance of running into a hard-ass instructor that will actually ask to see an obituary. I have seen this happen. So this can be kind of risky.

I have always thought that being creative with your excuses is the best way to go.

Here is an idea you could use if you are unprepared for a test. This involves actually going to class during the exam, so if you are trying to leave town or sleep in, this one won't work for you.

This is what you do. A few minutes after the exam begins, try to muster up a good fart and make it as loud as you can so that hopefully the teacher and at least the students around you can hear it. Then jump out of your seat and shuffle out of the room as fast as you can while holding the seat of your pants.

Don't come back. Your instructor will then not be surprised when you give him/her a phone call later that day explaining how you lost control of your bowels during the exam. Make sure to explain how embarrassed you were and how sorry you are that you could not complete the exam. Your instructor will most likely have no problem letting you take the test at a later time.

Now I understand not everyone can fart on command. This trick might work without the fart, but it will be much more convincing with it. I also understand that it takes a lot of courage to let your classmates think that you have crapped your pants, so this trick is only for the bold student who is desperate not to fail an exam.

This next trick works extremely well for women when used on a male instructor. Simply make up some excuse involving "feminine" problems. Men usually don't like discussing such topics and are likely to cut you off mid-sentence and excuse you from the exam until a later date.

"A few minutes after the exam begins, try to muster up a good fart and make it as loud as you can so hopefully the teacher and at least the students around you can hear it."

It is also very powerful to simply drop the word abortion somewhere in the conversation. Again, this takes a lot of guts to do, but can be very effective due to the emotional whirlwind involved in such a situation. And I guarantee that no instructor will ask for any kind of proof. It is important to understand and utilize the power of a crying woman.

Conversely, if you are a male, you can take advantage of your female instructors' lack of knowledge of a male-orientated subject. Go with the stereotype that most women don't have extensive knowledge of the inner workings of the automobile.

Explain to your instructor that you were on your way to the test when the flux capacitor in your car exploded, causing a surge of energy that fried your thermal drive, which sent magnetic shock waves through the body of your car causing you to suffer a mild case of isolated amnesia.

I can think of dozens of great excuses to use in order to get out of taking an exam. But doing so would take forever. What you need to understand is that there are a few basic rules that you should follow when making up a good excuse.

Make sure that your excuse targets your instructor's sympathetic nature, emotions or susceptibility to confusion. Whatever you decide to do, make sure you are creative and that your excuse is over-the-top ridiculous. You want your teacher to think that your excuse is so crazy that no one would ever think to make up something so outrageous.

One last thing to understand is that many instructors do read the Collegian, so none of these excuses will work for you. And now that the instructors here on campus realize how dedicated and creative some of us students can be when it comes to getting out of taking a test, they will all be more cautious than they have been in the past. This whole column I just wrote has basically set us all back a few steps. So you're on your own. Good luck.

K-STATE CELEBRITIES

Goetsch

Name: Lori A Goetsch

Title: Dean of Library

How many years at K-State: I've been at K-State less than a year — a little over six months.

Favorite leisure activity: Two things really — I like to golf and I also sing in the local Sweet Adelines chorus, Wamego Dutch Mill chorus.

Three adjectives that describe you: Funny, collaborative, persistent

Describe an ideal night for you: At home with my husband Marty and our dog Simba — pizza, glass of wine, and a movie.

Favorite aspect of K-State: The strong sense of community here.

If you could change something about K-State, what would it be? More funding for the library (I have to say that!)

Most embarrassing moment in college? Tilting back in a chair so that I could lean against the wall of a classroom and having the chair bust out from under me.

Favorite alcoholic beverage: Beer.

If you could have lunch with anyone, who would it be? Joni Mitchell

If you could drive any car, what would it be? Gosh, being new here there is a lot! One thing students might find interesting — or scary — is that I play guitar and sing rock and roll in a garage (well, basement) band with my husband and brother-in-law for one weekend every year.

What is something that most students don't know about you: The one I have — a red Mini Cooper.

CELEB QUOTES

"Years from now, I would just want people to say, 'She was good to people and did a lot for the world.'"
— Paris Hilton

Carey

"Whenever I watch TV and see those poor starving kids all over the world, I can't help but cry. I mean I'd love to be skinny like that, but not with all those flies and death and stuff."
— Mariah Carey

Federline

"I didn't find her hot, I wasn't even really in that mind frame. I just got out of a long relationship, and I felt free for the first time. I was making money - legally. I was doing my part, supporting my ass."
— Britney Spears' charming husband Kevin Federline telling Details magazine about his first impressions of his wife.

Bullock

"I don't do anything anymore that feels safe. If it doesn't scare the crap out of you, then you're not doing the right thing. The hardest thing is the comedy, if it doesn't work, it's painfully obvious."
— Sandra Bullock, starring in "Miss Congeniality 2: Armed and Fabulous," on choosing her movie roles, on People.com.

Osbourne

"Everybody keeps telling me that. Maybe Sharon is but I don't know f— all about it."
— Ozzy Osbourne, asked by the New York Post about reports that he and wife Sharon are selling their Beverly Hills home.

The Collegian: Student Publications Inc. students have been producing the Collegian for K-State students since 1896. With a press run of 11,000 each weekday morning of fall and spring semesters, the paper is one of the state's largest morning dailies. Funding comes from Student Activity fees and from the student advertising staff that sells more than $500,000 in display advertising each year. The summer Collegian is published Wednesdays in June and July. The Collegian is one of the nation's most honored college newspapers. In Spring 2003 and 2004 the Collegian received a Gold Crown award from the Columbia Scholastic Press Association and in 2002 and 2004 won the Apple Award for best of show at the convention from the College Media Advisers. The Collegian is a frequent recipient of the Pacemaker Award from the College Media Advisers. For more information go to http://www.spub.ksu.edu. Student Publications: Student Publications Inc. is an independent, $1.3 million corporation that publishes the Kansas State Collegian newspaper, the Royal Purple yearbook and the K-State Phone Book. With more than 150 students on its payroll, Student Publications Inc. is one of the university's largest student employers. Five full time staff members assist the director in supporting the student staffs. The School: The K-State journalism and mass communications program is one of the oldest in the nation dating back to 1910. The Miller School has four sequences— advertising, electronic media, journalism (including electronic news), and public relations. The undergraduate program has been rated among the 20 best in the country. The Miller School, which is privately endowed, is the largest academic unit within the College of Arts and Sciences and the largest major on campus with an undergraduate enrollment of about 660. The graduate program offers a M.S. in Mass Communications with an enrollment of 30 students. The Miller School is fully accredited by ACEJMC. The University: Kansas State University, a comprehensive public education and research institution, was founded in 1863 and is one of the first three land grant institutions. It is located in Manhattan, KS, about 120 miles west of Kansas City. The Manhattan campus serves about 21,000 students. Kansas State University ranks first nationally among state universities in its number of Rhodes, Marshall, Truman, Goldwater and Udall scholars. Go to http://www.ksu.edu/ and http://www.k-state.edu/pa/statinfo/factbook. A copy of the university handbook which includes employment and promotion policies and procedures is available at http://www.k-state.edu/academicservices/fhbook/. The City: Manhattan has a permanent population of about 50,000. Located in the beautiful Flint Hills of north central Kansas, Manhattan is the county seat for Riley County and the retail center and medical hub for several counties. The town boasts a quality of life that includes an abundance of parks, an accredited zoo, recreation facilities and arts programs. The school system is considered one of the best in the state. HAMILTON | Commissioner speaks of national security issues the world who are often subject to radical education, high unemployment rates and repressive governments. The United States must be honest about their intentions.

"You cannot wage an effective War on Terror if you don't have a strategy to deal with this," Hamilton said. "We have to explain our ideas and our ideals."

And the obvious key to success, he said, is better intelligence. Agencies have taken steps to improve communication but important security concerns have still not been addressed, such as the continued inability to create an integrated terrorist watch list between border security, CIA and FBI.

"We kept asking the question, 'Who's in charge here?'" Hamilton said. "We never got an answer."

In addition, security technology is still behind in the most risky targets because funds are distributed on a political basis rather than assessing risk.

"The New York fire and police still cannot communicate with each other because they can't get enough radio spectrum," he said.

It's time for agencies to step up and take responsibility for communication and implementing the Commission's recommendations, he said.

"There are no quick fixes," he said. "The Commission said this is a generational problem we confront."

It will take time, possibly forever, for the terrorism threat to be eliminated, Hamilton said. It's important though to not forget that the terrorists know America's vulnerabilities and are patient in accomplishing their goals.

"We've succeeded by the most important measure – there has not been an attack since 9/11," he said. "But we must not take false comfort."

ROBERTS | Senator's visit to Fort Riley positive

Fort Riley has versatile resources, Roberts said.

"I believe the facility is effective, because it is a place where you can have a joint exercise with tanks, aviation, and other forces that allow preparation for any mission needed to protect our country," he said.

One reason the base would continue to be successful is because of continuous surrounding community support, Roberts said.

"The Manhattan and Junction City communities, along with the state task force have been doing a tremendous job in regards to housing, schools, highways, daycare, hospitals, and all quality of life issues," he said.

Roberts said he and Lovelace were both pleased with Fort Riley.

"I think the general's first visit to the fort was positive, because he was impressed with deployment capabilities and the training facilities," Roberts said.

where Clary is the only returning starter – the biggest area of concern for Snyder may be defense.

After establishing a reputation as one of the toughest units in the Big 12 Conference, the Wildcat defense struggled last season.

Defensive coordinator Bob Elliott did not have much to say on the prospects of his defense.

"It's got to be done on the field," Elliott said. "It can't be done by talking."

Players and coaches acknowledge they will carry the burden of trying to rebound from a disappointing season.

"We have to earn our respect back, and we have a big opportunity to redeem ourselves from last year," Webb said.

BUDGET | Regents schools to lose state funding

Eakin said.

Rawson said the improvements started before the problems with the state funding.

"We wanted to improve our school by giving money to non-salary items, such as the library and technology. We didn't anticipate the state to fall on hard times. The state now gives less, so we have to use more of tuition on the improvements," Rawson said.

These improvements include implementing a better technology infrastructure, tuition reductions for undergraduate students who show need of assistance, a raise in minimum wage for student hourly employees from $5.75 to $6.00, establishing a University Honors program, adding resources to coordinate the activities for club sports, and protecting the library's purchasing power from inflation.

Because state funding is being cut back, tuition is rising so improvements can be made and finished before the five-year plan is up, Rawson said.

According to a Collegian article written in 2001 when the five-year plan was being discussed, the increase was to position K-State in the top 10 of land grant schools, not to make up for a cut in state funding.

Currently, the total state budget is $10.2 billion. The K-12 schools get $4.5 billion in funding, while the Regents schools get $2.2 billion, he said.

For the 2004 fiscal year, K-State undergraduates were paying $117 per credit hour. The proposed tuition for 2005-2006 is $137 per credit hour, a 17.1-percent increase.

According to the plan, the 2005-2006 school year should be the last year of the plan. The proposal by the Student Senate and the provost's office will be finalized in April and sent to the state in May.

After the 2005-2006 school year, which completes the five years, the plan is to keep tuition at a constant rate, Rawson said.

State Senator Roger Reitz, R-Manhattan, said the budget could change because of re-elections in the House of Representatives.

"Next year, the entire House will be up for re-election," Reitz said. "It's highly unlikely that they will be subjecting any tax increase. If there will be tax increases, they will be this year."

Reitz said there is an advisory committee that decides on the education funding.

"There is a committee designed to see if there's any significance to raising the state funding for schools," Reitz said.

"If they think there is a chance that it will pass through the Senate, they will (take it to the floor). If they run it, there's a chance for the Regents institutes to get more money."

The committee makes suggestions to the floor regarding Regents schools.

Since the Kansas Supreme Court ruled Kansas legislature must re-evaluate its funding formula for public schools. Reitz said the state budget gives money first to the K-12 schools.

"Everything is going to take a back seat to what is happening in K-12," he said.

Fort Riley soldier to face court martial

By John Milburn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A Fort Riley soldier will face a court martial in June for the deaths of two other soldiers at a home in rural Kansas, the Army announced Thursday.

Sgt. Aaron Stanley, 22, of Bismarck, N.D., is charged with two counts of premeditated murder in the shootings of Staff Sgt. Matthew Werner, 30, of Oxnard, Calif., and Spc. Christopher D. Hymer, 23, of Nevada, Mo. The men died in October in a house in Clay Center, about 30 miles from Fort Riley. Authorities have not revealed a motive for the crimes.

Maj. Gen. Dennis Hardy, the post's commander, made the decision to court martial Stanley last week, said Sam Robinson, Fort Riley spokeswoman.

Also charged is Sgt. Eric Colvin, 23, of Papillion, Neb. A decision on whether he will face a court martial hasn't been made, Robinson said.

All four soldiers were part of the 1st Battalion of the 41st Infantry Regiment based at Fort Riley. About 750 soldiers from the unit are serving their second tour of duty in Iraq.

Along with murder charges, Stanley faces numerous drug charges, one

Highways receive $21 million

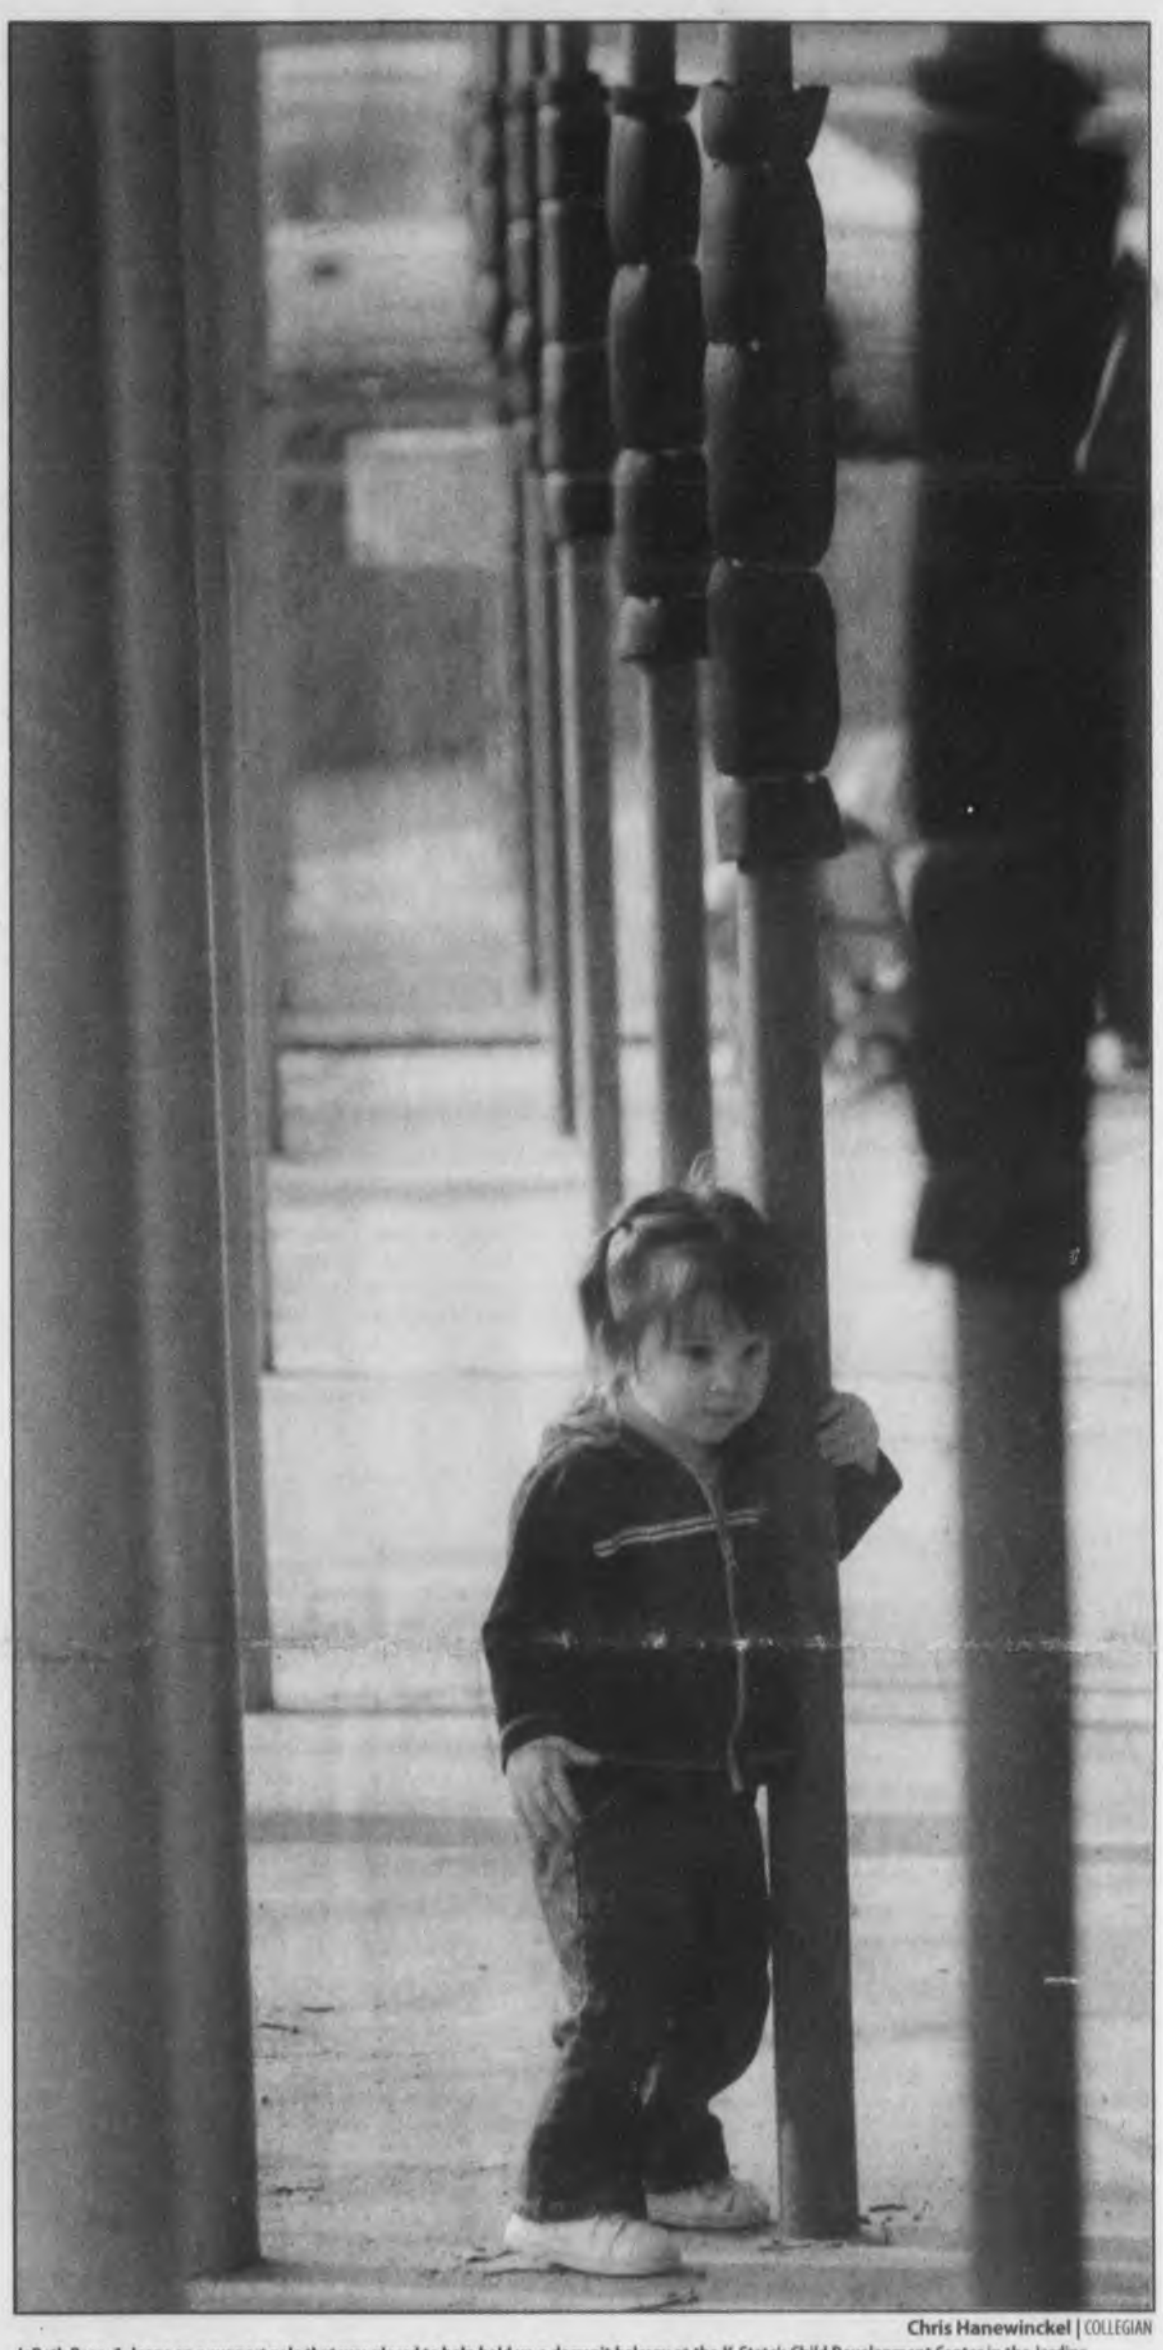
By Zachary T. Eckels
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Kansas Highway Patrol has received more than $21 million from the United States Department of Homeland Security's Office of Domestic Preparedness.

The grant will be distributed to Kansas counties and cities after being broken down into five programs.

"They need it for natural disasters, local law enforcements, basically for fighting the war on terror at home," Molly Mueller, deputy press secretary for Senator Pat Roberts, said.

The money that is left over will go to the state of Kansas, Lt. John Eichkorn said.



This money will be used, among other things, for new fingerprinting and DNA equipment for the Kansas Bureau of Investigation, he said.

Students assist in redesign of Child Development Center

By Jessica Holland
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Leaking roofs, cracking floors and balconies, heating and cooling problems and eroding playground equipment surround the children at the K-State Child Development Center.

K-State's Child Development Center is working on plans for the construction of a new facility.

"This one is old and falling down around us," Debra Ring, director of the center, said.

The center is located in the middle of the Jardine Complex. The complex is under a $300 million redevelopment plan, so the center will need to be rebuilt and possibly relocated.

Ring said the new facility is not likely to be built for another two years.

The current center was built in the mid-1950s and was meant for student housing, not a child-care facility. During the past 50 years, the building has been slowly deteriorating and is in need of a makeover.

Furthermore, new licensing regulations will soon be in place that will prevent preschoolers from accessing the second floor, which conflicts with the center's current design.

Also, unlike many other university child-care centers, K-State's is among the few that lack room for infant care.

"We don't have room for infant care and there is a huge need for that in this community," Ring said. "We'd like to add three infant classrooms."

The center's facilitators hope the future building will be much more appropriately designed for children.

Plans are underway. The center has been distributing surveys to parents asking them to rate what is important for the new facility's plans.

Ring said the center has received many helpful surveys with parents' comments and suggestions.

To further aid in the planning, K-State President Jon Wefald appointed a task force of 12 K-State faculty, deans and administrators to study the center and determine where the building should be located.

The task force is responsible for determining which department will oversee the center, if any, and how the university will help it to raise money. Once these factors are determined, the task force will formulate a recommendation that should be ready by May.

The center has also turned to students for help with the building. An architecture class was recruited to put together new designs. Marina Pecar, fourth-year design

Education funding bill sent to Sebelius despite concerns

By John Milburn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A $127 million boost in education funding crafted by Republican lawmakers is "an insult" that fails to meet a Kansas Supreme Court order to improve the state's public schools, the attorney who won that decision said Wednesday.

"It is so inadequate it is an insult to every school kid in Kansas," said Wichita attorney Alan Rupe. "It is an insult to the Constitution of Kansas. They've just fallen so far short of what their obligation is."

Rupe's reaction came hours after lawmakers sent to Gov. Kathleen Sebelius a plan drafted by legislative negotiators that would increase annual state spending on schools by $127 million, using existing revenues and cash reserves. The House approved it 76-48; the Senate passed it last week.

The vote caps efforts at the Statehouse to address the Supreme Court's Jan. 3 ruling, which gave legislators until April 12 to improve education in Kansas, primarily by increasing funding and making the distribution of dollars more fair.

"I do believe it answers many of the court's concerns," said House Education Committee Chairwoman Kathe Decker, R-Clay Center.

Sebelius said she would allow the bill to become law without her signature and will send it immediately to the court. Despite her own misgivings, she declined to speculate how the justices would react.

"I still see no long-term plan, especially in funding public education for years to come," Sebelius said. "In the end, this bill fails Kansas children, fails their families and fails our schools."

Republican leaders countered that the plan represents the largest increase in school spending since 1992.

"I think anyone that thinks they know what the court will do is guessing," said House Speaker Doug Mays, R-Topeka. "There is really no way to tell. We feel fairly comfortable. And we'll find out sometime soon."

Representing parents and administrators in the Dodge City and Salina school districts, Rupe sued the state in 1999, contending the state's existing school finance system is unconstitutional. He said Wednesday he plans to renew his request that the court appoint a special master – or expert – to devise a short-term fix.

A special master is needed because, he said, "The Legislature doesn't have

Famous Fools' pranks

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There is no specific date that is the quintessential first April Fools" Day. A common theory of the origin of April Fools' Day stems from the changing from the old Julian calendar to the Gregorian calendar in the late 1500s.

New Years' Day used to be celebrated on April 1, and under the Gregorian calendar, the New Year began on Jan. 1.

Some people refused to change, or weren't informed due to poor communication and were seen as Fools', and were sent on "Fools' errands" and were the butt of many jokes or pranks.

Friday's Edge
For more history behind April Fools' Day and more possible pranks, see Friday's Edge section.

Here are some famous pranks:

THE TACO LIBERTY BELL

In 1996, the Taco Bell Corporation announced it bought the Liberty Bell from the federal government and was renaming it the Taco Liberty Bell.

Citizens were outraged until Taco Bell revealed it was a practical joke a few hours later.

White House press secretary Mike McCurry responded to questions that the Lincoln Memorial had also been sold and would be known as the Ford Lincoln Mercury Memorial.

SIDD FINCH

In its April 1985 edition, Sports Illustrated published an article about a new rookie pitcher who planned to play for the Mets. His name was Sidd Finch and it was reported he could accurately throw a baseball 168 mph .

Finch said he had never played baseball before and had mastered the "art of the pitch" in a Tibetan monastery under the guidance of the "great poet-saint Lama Milaraspa."

Mets fans celebrated their team's amazing new player and Sports Illustrated was flooded with requests for more information.

George Plimpton, who wrote the article, left an obscure hint in the article's subhead: "He's a pitcher, part yogi and part recluse. Impressively liberated from our opulent lifestyle. Sidd's deciding about yoga – and his future is baseball." The first letters of each word, taken together, spells "Happy April Fools Day."

NIXON FOR PRESIDENT

In 1992 National Public Radio's "Talk of the Nation" program announced that Richard Nixon, in a surprise move, was running for President again.

Nixon's new campaign slogan was, "I didn't do anything wrong, and I won't do it again," and was accompanied by audio clips of Nixon delivering his candidacy speech.

Listeners flooded the show with calls and host John Hockenberry revealed it was a practical joke. Nixon's voice was impersonated by comedian Rich Little.

BIG BEN GOES DIGITAL

In 1980 the BBC reported that Big Ben, in order to keep up with the times, was to be given a digital readout. It received a huge response from listeners protesting the change.

The BBC Japanese service announced the clock hands would be sold to the first four listeners to contact them. One Japanese seaman in the mid-Atlantic immediately radioed in a bid.

STUDENT SENATE

Senate to vote on student center

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A student referendum may take place April 26, which will reallocate student fees if passed.

Students pay $10.27 student fees toward the expansion of Hale Library. That referendum was passed in 1993, and this referendum will have the same amount go towards a Center for Student Activities.

Hayley Urkevich, student body president, said the center would be added to the K-State Student Union on the east side.

Urkevich said the center will bring all campus organizations together.

"I think it will really help student groups grow on campus," she said. "It'll be one easy place for students to go and see what's going on and get involved."

In other business, Student Governing Association may be taking a stance on proposed federal funding cuts to agriculture research.

Due to the cuts, which are in the Fiscal Year 2006 budget plan, K-State Research and Extension would lose $3.4 million over the next two years.

Matt King, chair of the governmental relations committee, said the cuts will affect many aspects of K-State.

K-State Research and Extension affects 23 departments from five colleges, King said.

"Those cuts are going to affect all of K-State," he said. "This is not just an agriculture problem."

Senator Nick Levendofsky, sophomore in agricultural communications and journalism, said the cuts will directly affect departments in the colleges of agriculture, arts and sciences, education, engineering and human ecology.

"I thought it was very important that we address the cuts we are experiencing," Levendofsky said.

Ten faculty and staff members and 128 graduate students will be directly affected by the cuts, he said.

"Those are people who have worked really hard for K-State," Levendofsky said. "It would be sad to see that the funding for the projects that they have been working very hard in to be cut."

Senator Andrew Treaster, senior in political science, said Student Senate taking a stance will have more force than individual voices.

"It's something that might make a difference if we have a united voice on it," he said.

King said there could be similar resolutions going through senate depending on what Kansas Legislature does with higher education funding.

"We're waiting for state legislature to get the K-12 funding finalized," he said.

Businesses moving in, out of Aggieville

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Aggieville is getting a new business while another is moving out.

Planet Sub, a regional restaurant, is located at 708 Manhattan Ave.

According to their Web site, Planet Sub was started about 20 years ago when Yello Sub introduced Planet Sub's unique flavor of their oven-baked sandwich.

The new business is the former location of Krystallos and Aggie Station.

Krystallo's and Aggie Station were destroyed by an electrical fire in May 2003.

Cheryl Sieben, director of Aggieville Business Association, said it has taken two years for a new business to go in due to fire clean-up, insurance procedures and the time to build.

"The good news is that we have a really nice structure," she said.

Right now there isn't a set opening date for Planet Sub, but the it will be opening soon, according to the Web site.

While Planet Sub is moving into Aggieville, The Futon Store is moving out.

Currently located at 1126 Moro Street, the business is closing its doors.

The Futon Store, which has been in Aggieville since 1989, is expected to close around the end of May.

Bill Kaszer, owner of The Futon Store, said the business has run its course in Aggieville.

"Aggieville is a pretty tough district for retail, which is not a bad thing," Kaszer said.

Kaszer said Aggieville is mostly a district for bars, food, and entertainment.

"It's difficult for retail businesses to compete with these other businesses," he said.

It is uncertain what business will take the place of The Futon Store.

Sieben said Aggieville is not expecting any more additions in the near future.

"We're lucky that most of our storefronts are full," she said.

CITY COMMISSION

Expense reports show differences in spending

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

City Commission candidate Tom Phillips spent more than twice as much money as any other candidate, according to election expense reports filed Monday.

Phillips, who received the most votes in the primary election, spent $11,229.58 on his campaign in the period from Feb. 18 to March 24. Major costs included $5,137.83 on advertising and $3,096.96 on printing.

The report showed that $7,473.64 was already available at the beginning of the period. Citizens for a Better Manhattan gave Phillips $500 for the period, and the Kansas Realtors Political Action Committee was another major contributor, giving $400.

"It seems like every year people are spending more and more," County Clerk Rich Vargo said. "The signs and the billboards just keep getting bigger."

The average expenditure for the top three city commission candidates in the last election was $4,192.26. The average for the current election is $7,105.85.

Brad McCune had the second highest expenditures with $5,318.34. His major expenses included billboards, poster designs, web page development and postcards.

Jayme Morris-Hardeman spent $4,769.62. She reported two contributions of $500 from Citizens for a Better Manhattan during the period. Her biggest expenses included radio ads and postage, as well as a reimbursement for a loan from herself in the amount of $1,867.20.

Jim Sherow spent $4,144.40 for his campaign during the period. Like Morris-Hardeman, he received two $500 contributions from Citizens for a Better Manhattan, as well as a $500 contribution from Carpenter Local 918 Political Action Committee. He used $2094.03 for advertising.

Incumbent Mark Hatesohl spent $3,539.13. The Kansas Realtors Political Action Committee gave him $400. He cited billboard fees as his biggest cost.

Sam Robinson spent $3,075.40 on her campaign. She also received $400 from the Kansas Realtors Political Action Committee. Most of her money went toward advertising.

"People equate spending more money with having a more successful campaign," Vargo said.

Accidents more frequent near campus

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The intersection of two roads can be a dangerous place.

Most of the dangerous intersections in Manhattan are from Third Street to 17th Street on Bluemont Ave., according to the Riley County Police Department traffic accident records.

Part of the reason for the number of accidents in that part of town is the traffic volume and the age of the drivers in that area, said Capt. Brad Schoen, commander of the patrol division of RCPD.

"We know we have a lot of accidents in that area, it's not rocket science. So we have hammered that area of Bluemont from 17th to Third, by handing out more traffic violations. We'll be doing an analysis to see if that has helped reduce accidents," Schoen said.

He said college-aged drivers make up a number of the accidents, and it's not that they are bad drivers, just less experienced.

Topping the list of most dangerous intersections in Manhattan are Third and Fourth streets and Bluemont Avenue. The two intersections have created a number of problems in the past, and that is why they were reconstructed last year, Bruce Snead, City Commissioner, said.

"There were a combination of things, reconstructing the area, long standing congestion and accidents," Snead said. "I'm not sure what this last year's numbers are for accidents, but I would be interested to see if the reconstruction has helped."

Schoen said the two intersections are a problem with accidents. He said knowing if the reconstruction or amount of patrolling has helped decrease the number of accidents won't be known, because it is in the middle of its first full year.

Manhattan spends $800,000 to $1 million each year maintaining roads, he said.

"We can always do more maintenance," Snead said. "We analyze where the worst conditions are, the heaviest loads and see what roads need to be revitalized and resurfaced and then we try to prioritize them.

"We try to maintain and improve what we can. Could we be doing more? Absolutely."

TO THE POINT

Dangerous intersections need attention

Maintenance of Manhattan's streets is a continuous process, and there are a few intersections that stand above the others as dangerous crossroads. There are many options for increasing driver safety on the streets – options that the city of Manhattan as well as its residents should pursue.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The Riley County Police Department has isolated the most hazardous intersections in the city. They should continue to monitor these intersections to provide city officials with information on whether reconstruction of intersections has a discernable effect on lowering accident numbers.

Although the full effectiveness of previous intersection reconstruction projects remains uncertain, officials need to continue devoting funds toward improving intersection safety.

City officials admit that there is more work that could be done to upgrade the most dangerous intersections in the city. Since Manhattan stands to gain over $2 million in extra sales tax revenue this year, the city should devote part of those funds to completing maintenance.

Working with the RCPD, officials can make driving in Manhattan safer through the identification and rectification of intersections where accidents most commonly occur.

In the meantime, Manhattan residents and K-State students should be aware of the most hazardous areas of the city and exercise caution when driving.

Marriage not a legal issue

Recognizing gay marriage would expand the government's control

GRANT REICHERT

Gay marriage is legal.

Any gay couple in America can have a wedding and commit themselves exclusively to one another. If this is not gay marriage, then nothing is.

I take for granted that a government stamp is not required to make a marriage "real." If it were, that would be a disturbing statement on the extent to which people have become beholden to government to validate their lives.

It's not up to the state whether two people are spiritually and emotionally bound; marriages would still exist in a world without government.

Since gay marriage is currently legal, why the push for gay marriage? Some might say it's about attaining the same legal benefits for gay marriages as are available to traditional marriages.

But if it is all about legal benefits, then the deceptive rhetoric of a grand struggle for the right for gays to marry must be abandoned, because gay marriage is already allowed in every state, and because the legal benefits to be obtained aren't a defining part of what marriage is.

Further, this argument for legal benefits is only an argument for civil unions or some sort of contract.

This argument for legal benefits also contains a flawed assumption: that some principle of equality requires that gay marriage have the same privileged legal status as traditional marriage.

Traditional marriages are given this privileged legal status as a sort of "subsidy" in order to encourage their proliferation. The question is, why do traditional marriages constitute a compelling state interest worthy of subsidy, and gay marriages not?

Traditional marriages are the main agent of societal propagation, producing and rearing the children that will be tomorrow's citizens, whereas gay marriages are inherently non-procreative. Children that come from traditional family structures are more likely to become properly functioning citizens than those from broken or single-parent families, and so merit subsidizing.

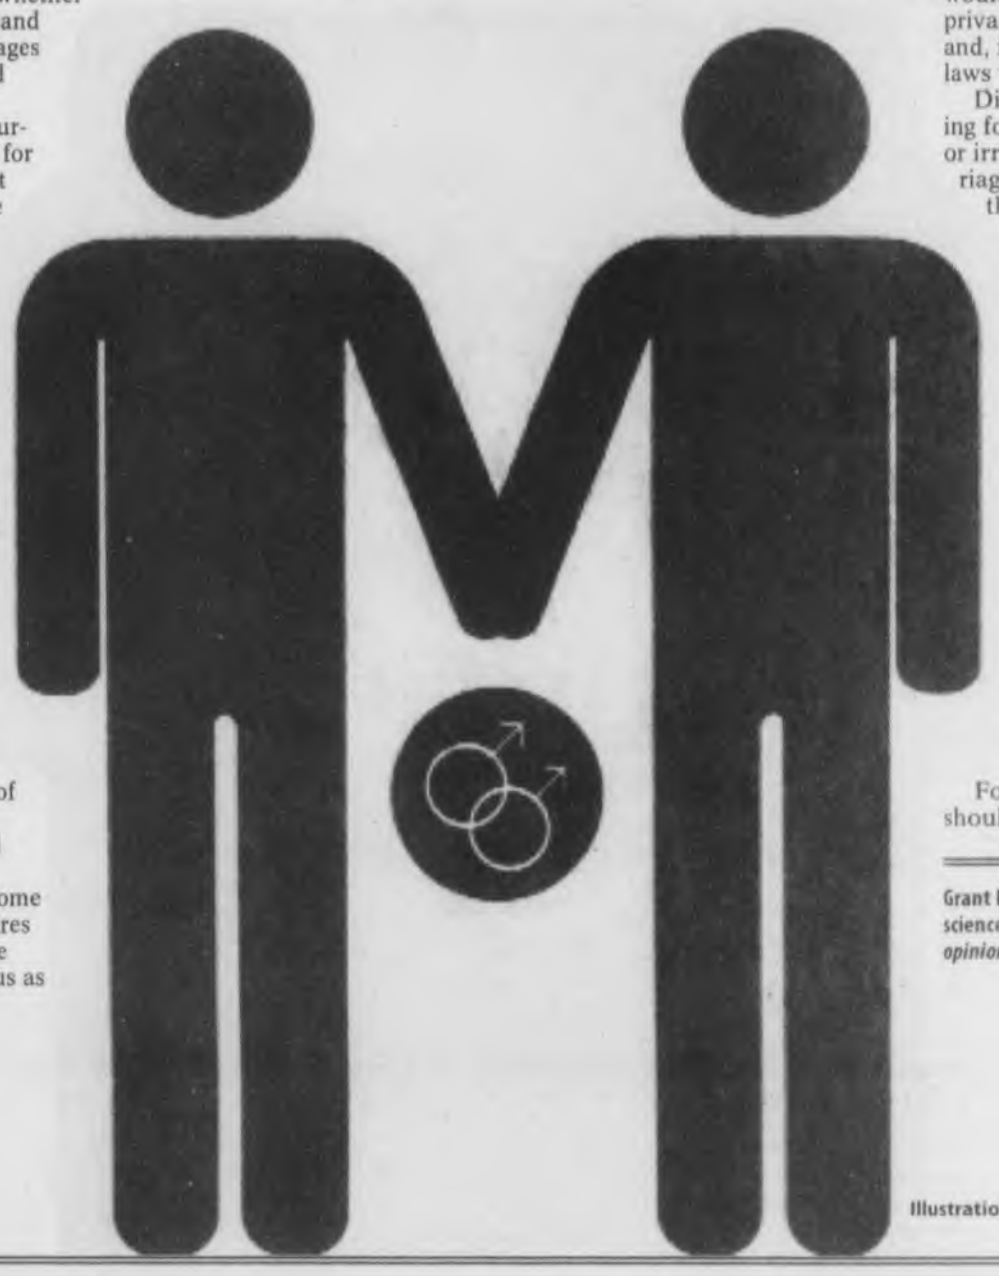
Traditional families are also the best guarantors of future liberty.

There's an inherent tension between families as a source of authority and a support structure, and government as a source of authority and a support structure - the increase in power of one decreases the power of the other. Stable families resort less to social programs than broken ones; when families fail, government steps in to pick up the pieces.

As a critique, some ask, "Why are sterile or otherwise non-procreative hetero marriages also subsidized if we're interested in procreation?"

Law is by nature the imperfect manifestation of perfect principles, and can contain arbitrarily drawn lines. For example, we set the voting age at 18 because we find this a sufficient standard to determine maturity. Here, it's simply the case that "one man, one woman" is the most efficient signifier of potentially procreative unions.

Some ask, "Why not outlaw divorce and adultery if we are trying to promote procreative marriages?" But outlawing adultery would require a huge violation of privacy and liberty to enforce, and, in any case, it's unlikely such laws would deter adulterers.



Divorce is legal because allowing for the dissolution of abusive or irreconcilably conflicted marriages increases the strength of the institution of marriage.

No fundamental "right to marry" is being denied by not having the government endorse gay marriage and no principle of equality is being violated by legally privileging traditional marriages.

Legally privileging gay marriage would be an unnecessary expansion of government influence. We shouldn't endorse the logic that says legal recognition is necessary for the existence of marriage. This would give undue power to the government in defining our intimate relationships, and thus ourselves.

For liberty's sake, gay marriage should be left essentially as it is.

Rampant hypocrisy clouds Schiavo case

AARON DUNCAN

For two weeks, the Terri Schiavo case has dominated talk radio and public debate. While everyone seems to have an opinion on what should happen to Schiavo, only a few have all the facts.

The truth is that only members of the medical profession and her family are in a position to argue about what should be done. The purpose of this column is not to take a stand on this case; I feel I am inadequately informed to weigh in on what is a deeply personal, emotionally charged decision.

What merits further discussion is the tremendous hypocrisy that surrounds the Schiavo case.

Our president is one of the biggest hypocrites involved in the case. Recently, Bush signed the Schiavo law which changed the jurisdiction of the case and has publicly stated his position that she should be kept alive.

However, in 1999 when Bush was governor of Texas, he signed a law that is in direct conflict with his stance on the Schiavo case. Last Monday, the Associated Press reported that in 1999 while governor of Texas, Bush signed the Advanced Directive Act into law. The law says if the patient's surrogate decision maker and doctors agree, life-sustaining treatment can be stopped.

In an AP interview, Thomas Mayo, an associate law professor at Southern Methodist University who helped draft the Texas law, said that if the Schiavo case had happened in Texas, her husband would have been her surrogate decision-maker. Because both he and her doctors were in agreement, life support would have been discontinued.

The March 24 London Guardian goes on to explain, "as governor of Texas, Bush signed a state law permitting hospitals to cease artificial life support when doctors decide reasonable hope is gone, even if the patient's family objects."

President Bush and many who share his position have stated that it is necessary to "err on the side of life." There is nothing wrong with this thinking, but it is a hypocritical stance for many involved in the case.

Take for example a man in South Carolina who offered a bounty for the death of Terri's husband, Michael Schiavo, and the Florida judge who ruled in his favor. The March 22 Seattle Post-Intelligencer noted that Bush's stance seems ironic given that while as governor of Texas he executed more inmates than at any other time in history.

In several cases, evidence arose late that inmates may have been innocent, but Bush did not choose to err on the side of life then.

One of the most troubling aspects of the case is that it has become so politicized. The London Guardian noted that a memo circulated among Senate Republicans called the Schiavo case "a great political issue." The memo also stated that Democrats would find it "tough" to respond to, and the conservative "pro-life base will be excited."

Conservative lawmakers who have claimed that the federal government should not be interfering in state issues did just that when they voted for the Schiavo law.

The fact is, the federal government legally has no reason to be involved in this case. Claims have abounded from talk radio that judges are making laws and acting outside the bounds of the constitution. In reality, just the opposite is true.

Both federal and state judges have upheld long-standing laws stating that, when needed, an individual's spouse acts as their legal guardian. To take authority out of Michael Schiavo's hands would require rewriting laws and legal precedence.

I don't begrudge Terri's parents for doing what they believe is correct, but I will hold a grudge against those who have chosen to exploit this case for their own gain.

Decriminalizing marijuana

Organization promotes weed as an alternative to alcohol

ROCKY MOUNTAIN COLLEGIAN
COLORADO STATE

Illustration by Jordan Mizell | COLLEGIAN

FORT COLLINS, Colo. – SAFER is a new organization of marijuana activists that has been promoting marijuana as an alternative to alcohol on the campuses of Colorado State University and the University of Colorado. The organization is currently trying to reduce the penalties for marijuana use to the same penalties that underage drinkers receive.

Mason Tvert, the executive director for SAFER, said universities are steering students toward alcohol by giving harsher penalties to those who use marijuana.

The cause-and-effect relationship being proposed here is that students who fear being caught for smoking marijuana are going to indefinitely turn to alcohol. However, since the effects of the two substances are completely different, marijuana users aren't necessarily going to turn to alcohol as a substitution.

Making penalties for marijuana use and underage drinking equal would say that they are equal in legality. Whether or not marijuana is healthier for an individual isn't the issue, the issue is that it is illegal. Drinking is only against the law if done by someone underage.

The flak that university administrators would receive, as well as the already negative stigma that Colorado universities have attained in the past year would increase if such a policy was adopted.

"There is obviously a problem and the school's policies are not working," Tvert said.

There is a problem, but the problem isn't to be solved by making marijuana use less punishable.

Seniors should enjoy last days

By Bob Johnson
UNIVERSITY DAILY KANSAN

LAWRENCE, Kan. – Now what? What happens next? Where do we go from here?

For you, near-graduate, it seems that all you have are questions. Yes, with the close of spring break so ends the fantasy.

The denial that you lived in through February and March has come back to slap you in the face: No job, no money and only the foggiest and most distant of possibilities lined up for post-graduation. My dad's friend's brother works for a pharmaceutical company, and I think they are looking for people.

The day we always knew would come has finally arrived on the doorstep. With May comes the end of our lives as we have known them so fondly for the last four years. Something must be done to delay this Armageddon, to decelerate the onset of cell phones attached to our belts and assigned parking spaces. Who really wants to recap last night's "Survivor" episode with his co-workers while waiting for the budget meeting to start? Not I, my friends, and I suspect not many of you.

So, seniors, what is left?

Saddest of all, basketball is over. Those senior players did not deserve to go out like that, in the first round to a school that none of us had even heard of until Selection Sunday. For those of us who came to this hallowed institution nearly four years ago alongside Keith, Wayne, Aaron and Mike, this tournament's loss was not only the end of a basketball season, it was the end of an era and the anticlimactic culmination of our college careers.

But we cannot let this unfortunate fact deter us from our duty as the undergraduate elderly to slack off in our conventional commitments and enjoy life. We must embrace our senioritis and let its charms dictate our actions in these precious days.

Senioritis is a deadly disease for which there is no vaccination. Even the most dedicated students fall victim to the lures of laziness when a college degree is on the horizon. Suddenly the president of this or the treasurer of that shivers at the sight of a library, but can recall with flawless clarity which "Seinfeld" reruns ran on TBS last week.

Traditional early risers have turned nocturnal, refusing to skip a night out for fear of what they might miss. I am here to say that these things are all OK. Let us channel what others label as sloth into the most memorable two months of our college careers. As the sun comes out and The Crossing fills up, let us bask in our lack of responsibilities and soak in the sunlight of our free hours. It is true that life will never again be the same, for better or for worse.

That is precisely why it is time to take advantage of every opportunity that comes along to relax and enjoy being a Jayhawk for these spare moments we have left.

As seniors, we owe it to ourselves to leave our mark on this university as one of the greatest classes to ever swagger down the hill. This is not a defined movement with one clear purpose. Rather, it is individualistic in nature, but ultimately glorious in its celebration of all that it means to be a senior at the greatest school in the land.

Make it your personal mission to enjoy your last days to their fullest extent. You are making every one of your fellow classmen proud. Stand tall and party hard, senior.

It's not over yet.

Student reflects on protecting American oil

Editor,

I had to go to the Persian Gulf from August of 1990 to April of 1991. I was a Navy Corpsman who worked in Casualty Receiving on the USNS Mercy. I heard the cries of pain, and I saw the American faces of death. Young men and women from my generation were killed trying to secure American oil interests.

Now the current generation of young men and women are dying to secure American oil interests. We had a clear victory in 1991, and liberals called it "The Highway of Death." This was meant to make us sound like blood-thirsty barbarians.

You cannot have security until you have victory. Democrats would rather have the youth of this country die in the sands of Arabia than drill in Alaska or off the Gulf of Mexico.

Democrats are dictating what we can and can't do with oil we all know is there. At the price of our youth!

Heterosexuality offers social benefits, purpose

Editor,

On Tuesday, Jesse Manning wrote an interesting but all too-common article concerning discrimination against homosexuality. The problem is not discrimination. For us to discriminate against homosexuality is like discriminating against arsenic. This subject must be dealt with more objectively.

Manning does not seem to be concerned with objectivity, but with equality. What would happen if we give cyanide equal status in our pharmacies as Advil? That is what Manning does. He gives homosexuality the same status as heterosexuality.

Life is full of inequalities. Professors have more authority and privileges than the students, the president more than the citizen. Are these not inequalities? And yet, we understand that they serve a purpose. Heterosexuality ought to have more privileges than homosexuality because heterosexuality serves a purpose in society.

Let us rationally discover what the purpose of sex is. I shall argue first through the comparison of food to sex. Do we eat for the sake of pleasure or nourishment? Biology teaches us that the primary purpose of eating is to sustain life. Yet, eating is pleasurable.

The pleasure is the accidental or secondary quality of eating.

Sex gives pleasure, but the end of sex is not pleasure, it is procreation. It is common knowledge that heterosexual interaction between a male and a female will make an embryo – a citizen in formation. Homosexual intercourse will not make such an embryo.

Homosexuality has no real purpose besides personal pleasure, while heterosexuality gives life to our country and pleasure to the lovers. Why should we give social advantages to people who are not acting toward a social end?

Christians should uphold marriage standards

Editor,

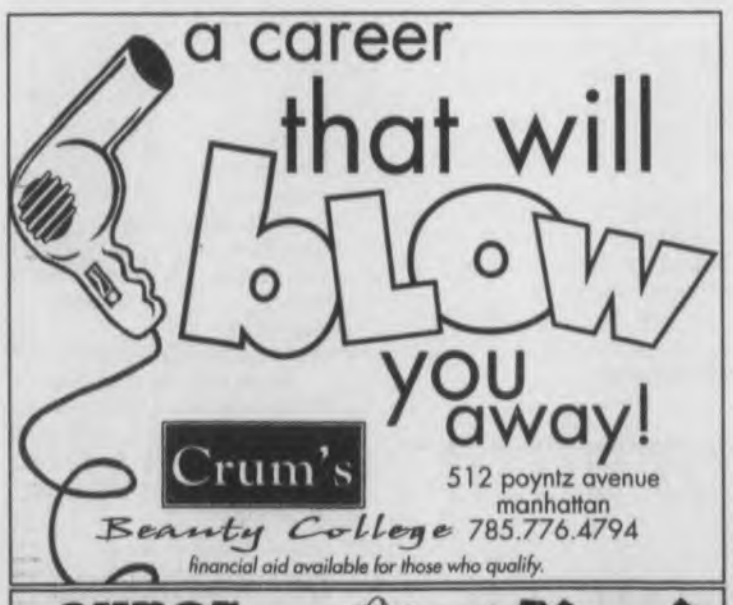
This is a brief response to Jesse Manning's column published on March 29, 2005. Manning's major point is that today's Christians should not persecute homosexuals. He is saying that if Christians do not wish to be like Nero they should not oppress homosexuals. While this argument may sound logical to him, it leaves out the most important subject – God and His plan for marriage, as stated in the Bible.

God's plan is for the welfare of all people, and His plan for marriage is for one man and one woman. The Bible clearly says that homosexuality is against God's plan and purpose.

Christians, whether in a minority or majority, would vigorously speak out against this perversion. Early-day Christians went through great tribulations because they believed in Jesus' teachings including marriage. Nero's fire did not quench Christians' belief when they were persecuted.

Today, even though Mr. Manning would like to impose Dante's immensely heavy robes made of lead on those who determine to follow Jesus' teaching, true Christians will hold their ground and follow Jesus' teachings about marriage and family. Those who follow God's plan are not hypocrites. Christians will walk in God's way rather than ever changing worldly paths and will not be influenced by political movements.

In God's eyes, homosexuality is wrong (Romans 1:26-32) yesterday, today and tomorrow.



Christians will vote "yes" because this will uphold God's standard for marriage.

Fans form emotional bond with their teams

NATHAN RYERSON

It has been almost two weeks since the Kansas Jayhawks lost in the first round of the NCAA Tournament to the Bucknell Bison.

Personally, I was crushed. Being a Kansas fan was a difficult task on the Saturday following the game.

I found it hard to eat, and the last thing I wanted to talk about was sports. The loss is the worst I have experienced during my 22 years on this planet.

Anyone who cheers for a team and follows it closely can feel my pain, despite the fact that my blood flows red and blue unlike the purple-blooded Wildcat backers who are reading this.

The loss got me thinking.

Why do sports fans have such an emotional bond to the teams they cheer for?

I am guessing after the K-State women lost to Vanderbilt last Monday in the second round of the women's NCAA Tournament, there were many devoted Wildcat fans drowning in their sorrow.

My philosophy is that being a true and devoted fan means establishing an emotional bond with the team, and the thought that being a fan might help the team win.

And when your team loses, you feel its pain.

That is what makes sports great. When the team fails, you are down, but in the near future, you will come out of that depression and say "There is always next year."

The pain goes away, and the following season brings new hope.

Life, unlike sports, does not give us this luxury.

When you lose your job or a loved one dies, you don't get to say "there is always next year."

That is the beauty of sports. It never goes away.

Despite wins and losses, ups and downs, sports never fade away.

You can turn on your TV anytime and watch them. You can turn on your radio anytime and listen to them.

Sports flow through many of us and become a part of our lives, and for that I am thankful.

Think back through your life, whether you are a sports fan or not, and there is probably some memory of something sports-related.

Some of my best memories are playing catch with my dad in our back yard. The joy of bonding with my dad all those years, through baseball, is something I will never forget.

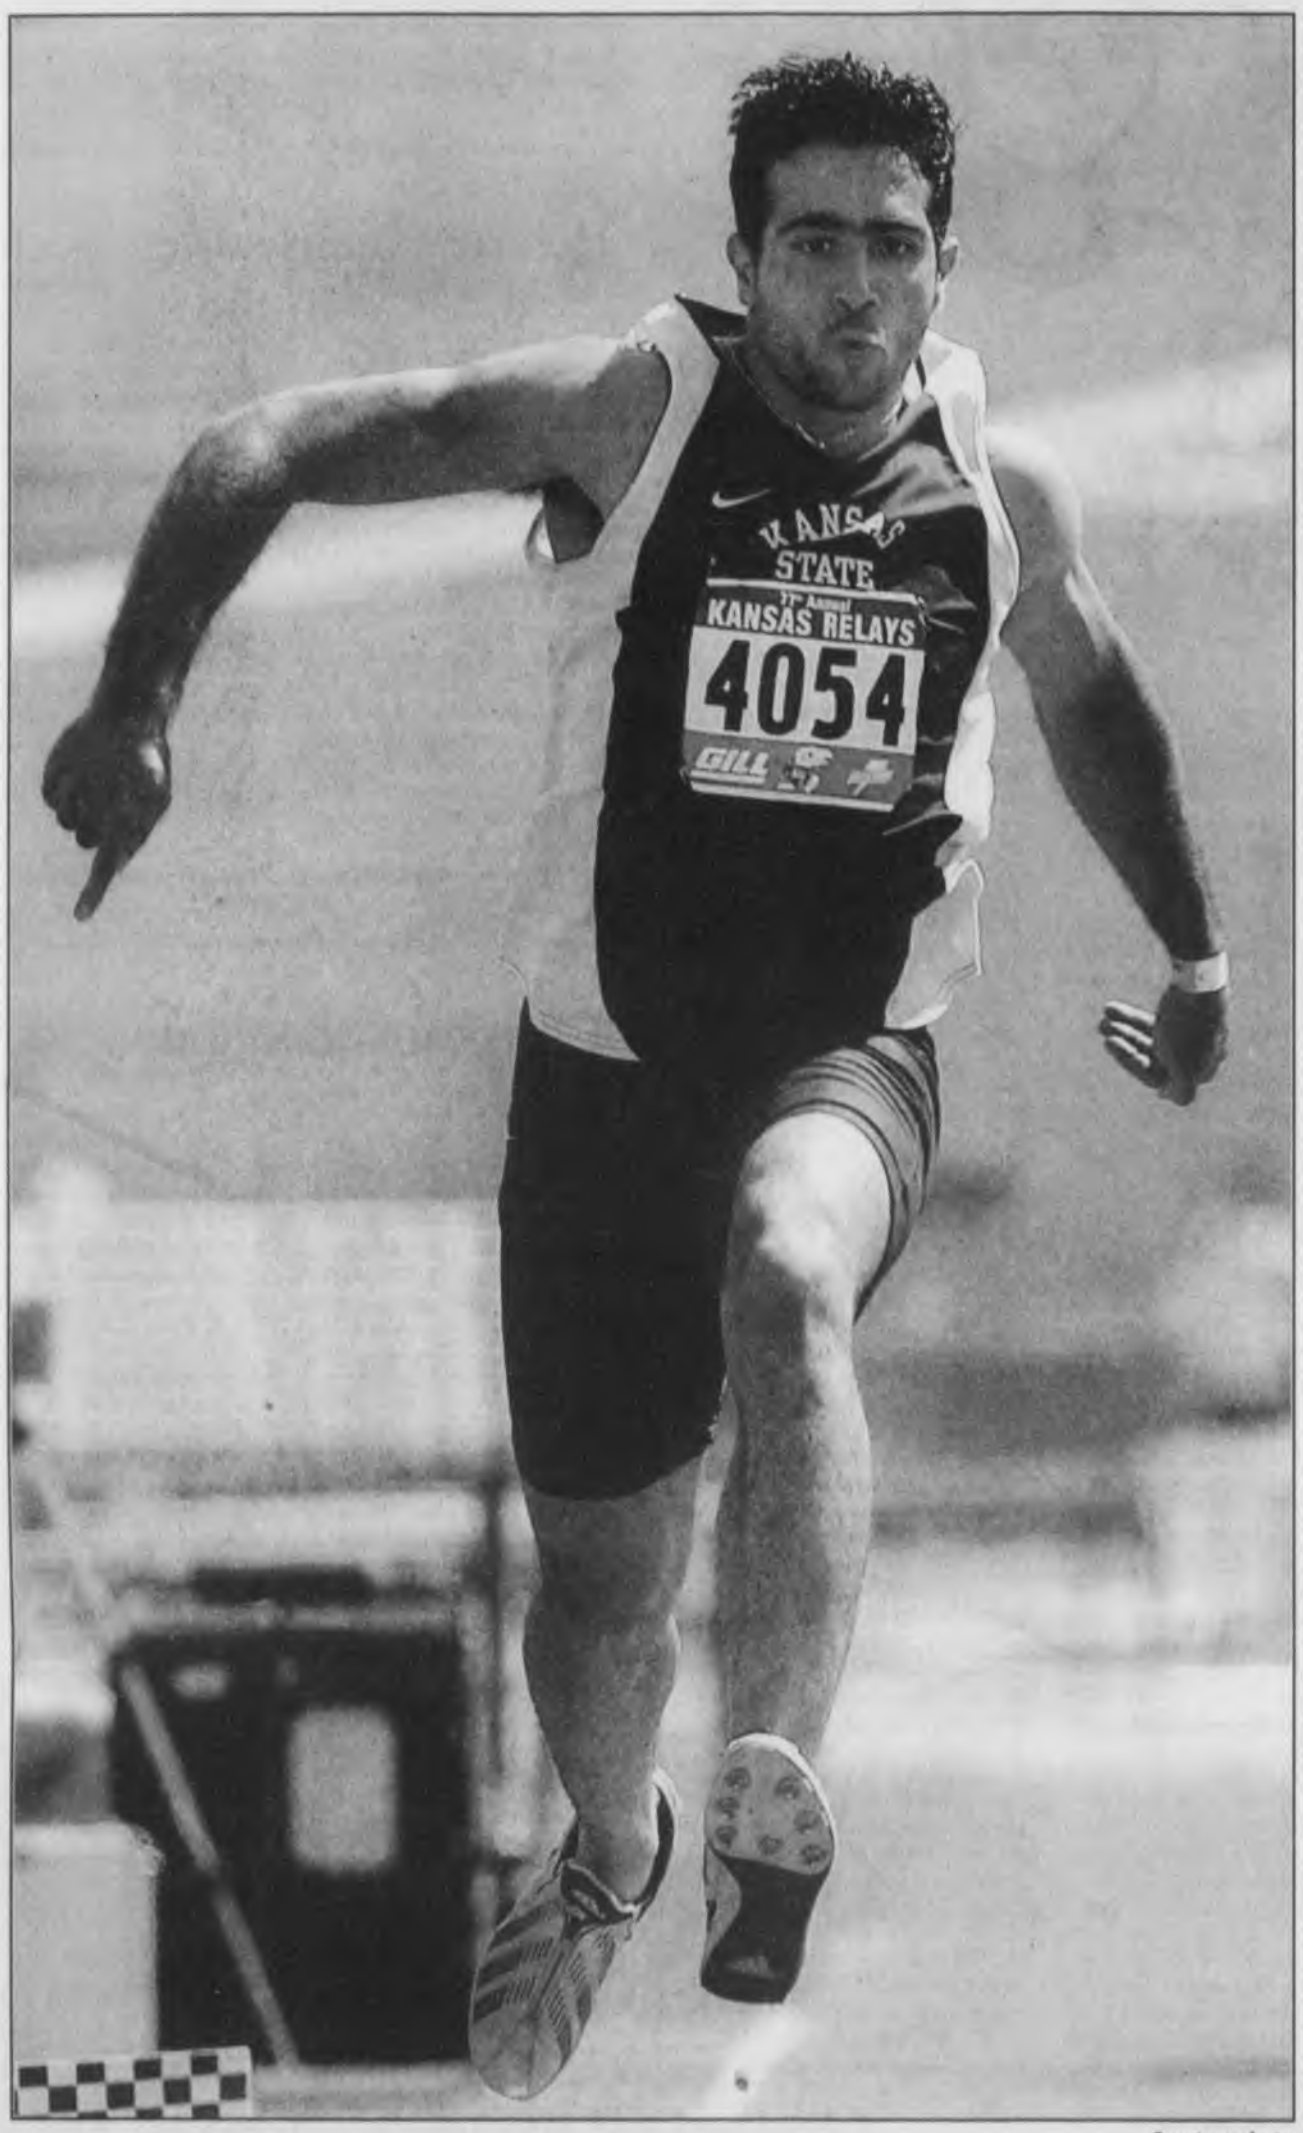
Sports can teach a person valuable lessons that can be used throughout life. They can help you be a better leader or work better with other people.

The social aspect of sports is another reason why they are so special. People usually don't go to baseball games by themselves, because that wouldn't be any fun. You go and hang out with your friends or family and have a great time.

Sports help bring us together.

Sports are one of the few constants out there and will never disappear. They may change and evolve, but in the end, all you have to do is pick up the remote and turn on the TV.

So, get your friends together and go to a sporting event. I watched K-State's baseball team beat No. 21 Wichita State on Tuesday night, and I had a great time.



You may have seen me – I was the one sitting next to the guy yelling as loud as he could at Willie the Wildcat, begging for a t-shirt.

If the team you cheer for happens to lose, just remember – there is always next year.

Triple-jumper from Cyprus looks for successful season

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Stelios Kapsalis has a wish for his 23rd birthday on May 13.

It can't be wrapped. It can't be bought with money – only determination and hard work.

Kapsalis, a junior triple-jumper and long-jumper on K-State's track team, wants to take first place in the triple jump at the Big 12 Outdoor Championships.

"I got second in the triple jump in the indoor Big 12 Championships," Kapsalis said. "I was injured and wasn't training as much.

"I didn't like it."

Kapsalis has been spoiled by success.

In 2004, he took first place in the triple jump at the Big 12 Outdoor Championships. He was 15 centimeters away from qualifying for the 2004 Olympics in the event. As a 19-year-old, representing his native Mediterranean island of Cyprus, he took sixth in the European Junior Championships in Italy.

The European Championships, Kapsalis said, are probably his greatest track achievement thus far.

"It's like a small Olympics, so it's more formal," Kapsalis said. "Professionals compete, and it attracts people worldwide."

In fact, the European Championships is where Wildcat Coach Cliff Rovelto first saw Kapsalis compete and obviously liked what he saw.

The feeling was mutual, Kapsalis said. K-State was where he wanted to go for college.

"I tried to set my standards on athletics and academics, and K-State has both," Kapsalis, a civil engineering major, said.

"Doing a high standard track program with a coach that has so many Olympians is aspiring," he said.

"Coach Rovelto has more Olympians than my country," Kapsalis joked.

A coach with a history of developing successful Olympians is important to Kapsalis – as he has aspirations of one day becoming an Olympian.

"I want to go to the 2008

Women's tennis to face Shockers in Wichita

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's women's tennis team continues its eight-match road trip this weekend against state rival Wichita State.

The meeting marks the third and final time K-State will face a Missouri Valley opponent this season.

Head coach Steve Bietau said Wichita State is a team he expects his squad to beat.

"I would certainly hope it's a match that we would win," he said. "I hope it's something that we can look back on and see some indications that we're playing better."

Wichita State is arguably the last "should-win" match for K-State before entering a very competitive stretch of six Big 12 Conference matches to round out the regular season.

Senior Maria Rosenberg said she views the match with the Shockers as a potential confidence-builder for K-State.

"I do think that this match could be something positive for us," she said. "It might give us confidence. In the past we've always done really well against Wichita (State) and it has given us a little bit of confidence against other teams."

K-State's freshman class of Fernanda Da Valle, Olga Klimova, Tereza Prochazkova and Tamar Kvaratskhelia is rated fourth in the Big 12 among freshman this season. Much of the success is due to the leadership of Kvaratskhelia, who holds the most wins by a freshman.

Their potential may not be fully realized until the class gets healthy. Klimova and Prochazkova have battled through ACL injuries and surgeries in addition to opponents this year.

Bietau said despite the unexpected setbacks, the freshmen have been resilient.

"We never expected two ACL injuries in one year. Maybe one, but to get two in one year is really a burden, and I think that just tells you how good of a group it is because in spite of that they've had an impact and they are continuing to improve," he said.

Track | Chesang named Big 12 Track Athlete of the Week

Mathew Chesang, a senior distance runner for K-State's track team, was named the Big 12 Outdoor Track Athlete of the Week for March 20-27, the first such honor for the native of Eldama Revine, Kenya.

Chesang

Last Friday at the Stanford Invitational in Palo Alto, Calif., Chesang automatically qualified for the NCAA National Championships by setting a K-State school record in the 10,000-meter run with a time of 28 minutes, 16.48 seconds.

The time eclipsed the 21-year-old mark of 29:16.48, set by Alfredo Rosas in 1984, and also ranks first in the Big 12 Conference this season.

WBB | Koehn, Wecker in Final Four festivities

K-State seniors Laurie Koehn and Kendra Wecker will be in St. Louis and Indianapolis this weekend to take part in festivities preceding the 2005 NCAA Men's and Women's Final Fours in each city.

Koehn and Wecker will first be in St. Louis for the 17th Annual Mountain Dew College Slam Dunk and Three-Point Shooting Championships. The event, held at Washington University Field House, will be televised live on ESPN at 8 tonight, and will be replayed throughout the rest of the weekend.

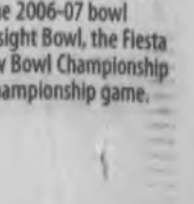
Then, both athletes will take part in this year's WBCA All-Star Challenge Game at the University of Indianapolis' Nicoson Hall. The game will begin at 3:30 p.m. Saturday.

Tickets for St. Louis are available at (314) 534-1111 or www.metrotix.com, and tickets for the WBCA game can be ordered at (800) 965-4827 or www.ticketweb.com.

AFL | McEntyre earns Arena League Player of the Week

Former K-State defensive back Kenny McEntyre was named the ADT Defensive Player of the Week for week nine of the Arena Football League season.

McEntyre



Currently a defensive specialist for the Orlando Predators, McEntyre helped lead his team to a 51-21 win over the Austin Wranglers on Friday with seven tackles, an interception, two pass breakups, a forced fumble and a fumble recovery.

This marks the sixth time McEntyre has earned an AFL weekly honor. McEntyre is also a three-time Defensive Player of the Year in the AFL.

NBA | Utah's Boozer out for remainder of season

SALT LAKE CITY — Utah Jazz forward Carlos Boozer will miss the rest of the season while he recovers from a foot injury in February.

Boozer

He has been ordered by his doctor to wear a boot over his right foot for at least three more weeks. Trainer Gary Briggs said Tuesday that Boozer's condition has improved and surgery has been ruled out for now.

Boozer, averaging a team-high 17.8 points and 9.0 rebounds, sprained his foot at Phoenix on Feb. 14. He spent his first two seasons with Cleveland and signed a $68 million deal with the Jazz last summer.

CFB | Proposed legislation might give Arizona 3rd bowl

PHOENIX — Lawmakers have introduced legislation that could help Arizona land a new national title game for college football.

Bills in the state Senate and House would amend the Fiesta Bowl's use agreement with the new stadium being built for the NFL's Arizona Cardinals.

Lawmakers gave the plan unanimous approval Tuesday in the House's Universities, Community Colleges and Technology Committee.

If the legislation passes, the metropolitan Phoenix area could host three games in the 2006-07 bowl season — the Insight Bowl, the Fiesta Bowl and the new Bowl Championship Series national championship game.

Strumming to a new beat

Radiohead survives by displaying innovation, refusing to stick to just one genre

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Remember the alternative rock boom of the mid-nineties?

Grunge was dead and buried with its founder, Kurt Cobain. His followers needed bands to which they could still bang their heads.

Enter Billy Corgan's The Smashing Pumpkins, Shirley Manson's Garbage, and Thom Yorke's Radiohead.

Only Radiohead has the distinction of surviving post-grunge as well as the wrath of "Creep," the single that haunts them to this day and allowed people the world over to feel comforted with their "alienation."

Radiohead's survival is a credit to their exceptional musicianship and refusal to pigeonhole themselves within genres.

Radiohead was formed in 1989 in Oxford, England. The band consists of Thom Yorke (guitar, vocals), Ed O'Brien and Jonny Greenwood on guitar, Colin Greenwood on bass, and Phil Selway on drums. Their original band name was On a Friday, but they were forced to change their name when signed to EMI/Capitol. Yorke changed the name to Radiohead after a song by Talking Heads, of whom Yorke is a devoted fan.

The band had a name and was signed to a major label; all they needed was a debut album and a lead single. Enter 1993's "Pablo Honey." The album was (rightfully) met with mixed reviews. The album was hardly a new sound. Recycling British guitar rock a la U2 and The Smiths, many critics wrote Radiohead off as one-hit wonders with their first single "Creep." The single became a Top Ten hit, and the album went gold regardless of its luke-warm reviews and mediocre sound.

The group entered the studio in 1995 to record a follow up album. The result was "The Bends." It was met with exuberant reviews . The album managed to go gold and it included such notable singles as "Just" and "Fake Plastic Trees."

The band toured extensively before returning to the studio in the fall of 1996. During that time, history was made with Radiohead's third album, "OK Computer." The album is a rock masterpiece with its paranoid lyrics and futuristically grounded sound. The album was met with immediate praise from critics and fans of the band. The album, unfairly, has only achieved gold status, even though it is one of the best albums of the nineties.

Expectations for the band were immense before the release of their fourth album. The band went through much inner turmoil throughout the recording sessions for this album, and at one point there were discussions of breaking up. The band pulled through by making the album of their career.

Titled "Kid A," it was an album made of challenging electronica mixed with rock, free-jazz, minimalism and other styles. The album caused intense reactions among critics and split the fan base, but this was the album that Radiohead was destined to make, an intense, introverted, often uneasy album. A year later, the band released "Amnesiac," which contained more songs recorded during the "Kid A" sessions.

In 2003, Radiohead released their sixth full-length album, "Hail to the Thief," an attack at the politics during its time of release. The band is currently at work on their seventh full-length.

Radiohead has gone through immense changes in sound throughout their rich career.

They are influential and critics are describing bands such as Coldplay, Travis, and the Doves as the 'next Radiohead.'

This is somewhat of a fruitless effort because as much as we try to find bands that are as wondrous as Radiohead, we must accept the fact that Radiohead is truly one of a kind.

"The Bends"

Radiohead's first triumph. They created a guitar album that was as influential as it was traditional. The music video for the single, "Just," created a stir and caused the album to go gold. Includes the masterpiece "Fake Plastic Trees."

"Kid A"

The album that Radiohead was destined to make. A brilliant, introverted affair filled with amazing electronics and chilling soundscapes. The album divided Radiohead's fanbase but is their best album yet. This album is by far the most important album of this decade.

"I Might Be Wrong"

A live album compiling songs from "Amnesiac" and "Kid A." Excellent re-creation of the album tracks set before a enthusiastic live audience. Includes the exclusive track, "True Love Waits."

"OK Computer"

One of the best albums of the nineties. Radiohead created a rock masterpiece with epic songs such as "Paranoid Android." It is a sweeping concept album about the paranoia accompanying the overtaking of technology in society.

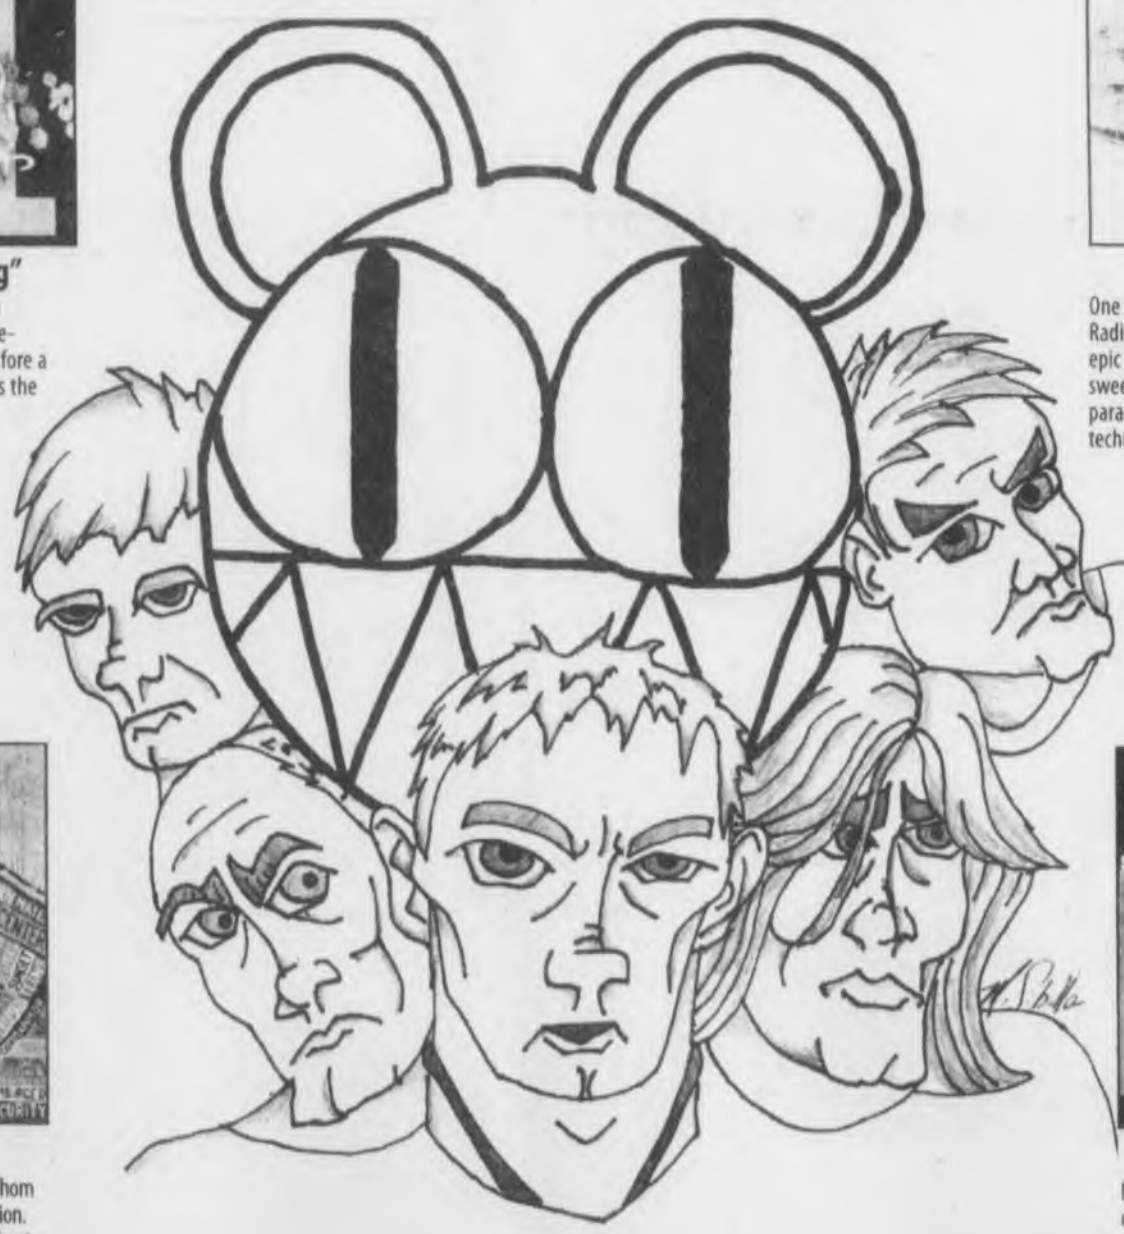

Illustration by Mark Sibilla | COLLEGIAN

"Hail to the Thief"

The title is a play on words and describes Thom Yorke's feelings for the current administration. Filled with angry and paranoid diatribes about Yorke's fear of what the White House may do to society. Still terribly relevant today.

"Amnesiac"

Not quite as brilliant as its predecessor, but close. Using songs that were recorded during the "Kid A" sessions, "Amnesiac" is a slightly more accessible affair that includes the disturbingly beautiful "Pyramid Song."

Sex plays little to no role in lives of asexuals

As those of you who read my column regularly know, sex and sexuality play a big part in my columns, much as I assume the two play a big part in your lives.

LACEY STORER

Whether you've been around the block a couple of times or are waiting for marriage, sexuality is still a part of your life. Every relationship, hookup, crush you've ever had has been, in part, because of sexual attraction. How far you go on that sexual attraction depends on you and your lifestyle, but it's still there.

This isn't the case for everyone though. There are people out there for whom sexual attraction plays no part in their daily lives. They don't have the same sexual urges and desires that the rest of us have. While others are heterosexual, homosexual and bisexual, these people are asexual. Sex has no part in their lives.

According to the Asexual Visibility and Education Network Web site, asexuality is the condition of having "no or low sexual attraction to other people." A study conducted in London last fall concluded that about one percent of people are asexual.

When I first read about asexuality, a dozen questions ran through my mind. Do asexuals not date at all? Do they date but not have sex?

The AVEN Web site provided me with lots of information and answers to some of my questions. The most important thing I learned was that there is a range of asexuality. Some can have high sex drives but just not express them; others have no sex drive at all.

Some asexuals are attracted to people, although in rare occasions, while others can recognize attractive people, but feel no attraction to them.

Some asexuals even masturbate because they can still enjoy the pleasure masturbation brings. The difference between asexual masturbation and sexual masturbation is the element of fantasy.

Sexual people fantasize about people to whom they would be attracted in real life. Asexual people may fantasize about people, but in a real-life situation, they would feel little to no attraction to them.

The most surprising thing I learned about asexuals is that they can fall in love. Now, I know love and sex aren't the same thing, but sexual intimacy, in any form, seems to be such a big part of relationships that it's hard to imagine a relationship without it.

But according to AVEN, sex isn't the only way to express your emotions for your partner. Sex is a "vehicle" for other things, such as emotional closeness, fun or an ego boost. But AVEN says all of these things can be achieved without sex.

Maybe so, but isn't sex what makes your romantic relationships different from all others? You can be best friends with someone from the opposite sex, but without that sexual element, isn't that all you are – friends?

I am still left with a lot of questions about asexuality. Do asexuals feel like they're missing out on anything? Do they feel left out in our very sexual society? What's a life without sex like?

Maybe someday I'll do more research and get all the answers to these questions. I'm just glad I don't know them firsthand.

Courses taught online gaining popularity

By Jessica Holland
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Once an unimaginable concept, today the amount of students enrolling in K-State's online courses is growing in popularity.

Students both in and out of state may take online classes to earn credit toward their degree through K-State's Distance Education Program. The program, which is run by the Division of Continuing Education, offers more than 200 courses.

The online courses are taught by K-State faculty, and therefore require the same workload, time commitments and difficulty as ones taught in the classroom.

Betty Stevens, associate dean of continuing education, said people from multiple states and even foreign countries are choosing to take online courses through K-State's Bachelor Degree Completion Program, which allows students from out of state to complete credit.

"I think that one of the reasons they do it is because they have more freedom of time so if they have a job, a family, or other commitments, they can use the online classes to solve some problems," Stevens said.

While some students who are taking these courses may not have ever even set foot in Kansas, the largest group of students who take online classes are older, independent students with families who live in Kansas, but not in Manhattan or Salina.

The Division of Continuing Education does not encourage on-campus students to take online courses because the on-campus courses have a greater need to be filled.

Still, more K-State students are now choosing to complete their studies on the computer.

Staci Vinduska, sophomore in biology, said there are multiple benefits to online courses.

"A lot of K-State students take courses over the summer because that's when they are going home," she said.

Others are now discovering the advantages of learning at a distance as well.

Kristina Kleinsasser, sophomore in animal science, is taking two online courses.

"They fit into my schedule so that I can work during the day and do my classes in the evening," she said.

However, Kleinsasser said while the level of difficulty for the online classes is the same as those on campus, it would be harder if she didn't live in Manhattan because she would not have the luxury of seeing her teachers.

"It's been a good experience, but I'd rather be in the classroom," she said.

Melinda Sinn, public information coordinator for the Division of Continuing Education, said if flexibility of time is important, then online courses may be a smart choice.

"Each individual student has to decide how to best schedule their courses. I think that online courses take more discipline because no one is telling you that it's time to go to class," Sinn said.

She said one advantage to online education is that students can review the context of the course through videotapes or CD-ROMs, whereas with a lecture a student can only review class notes.

Unfortunately for those living in state, state rules mean students pay more than their regular tuition because distance courses have to be self-supporting based on tuition and fees.

Stevens said K-State's online bachelor's programs also reflect some of the areas of excellence that K-State offers that others might not.

"We're appealing to a market of students who want a particular type of program that we have that no one else does," she said.

Engineering students to compete

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two teams of civil engineering students will compete in the American Society of Civil Engineers mid-continent regional conference this weekend.

The competitions are hosted by the University of Southern Illinois at Edwardsville, and includes a concrete canoe and a steel bridge competition.

CONCRETE CANOE

Sarah Grotheer, co-chair of the canoe team, said 12 members will be traveling to the event.

The canoe will be judged on three different aspects in the competition – aesthetics, an oral presentation and a race against the 12 other schools competing.

"We have to make a mold for the canoe and we have to come up with a concrete mix that will float on water," said Kelly Carlton, co-chair of the team.

The top two teams in the competition get to move on to the nationals competition in Clemson, S.C.

Grotheer said the materials to build the canoe were funded by about $3,500 in donations from companies as well as university donations.

STEEL BRIDGE

Six of the 10 bridge team members will construct a bridge in a time limit.

Scott Moeder, co-chair for the steel bridge team, said the team is judged on how quickly the bridge is constructed, how much the bridge weighs and how it deflects while supporting 2,500 pounds.

"We've loaded it and tested it, and we think it is really good. It's going to come down to our construction time," Moeder said.

The steel bridge team members have spent about 15 to 20 hours a week working on the project since the beginning of the fall semester.

Moeder said all of the time and effort put into building the bridge have been beneficial.

"I've learned a lot about management," he said.

"There is a lot more involved than just building it."

Moeder said the materials for the bridge were also funded by donations from companies who contributed $1,500 and university donations.

Economy, media guide students' choice of major

By Ben Spicer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The economy and media may have something to do with trends in different majors.

K-State boasts more than 200 majors and secondary options for current and prospective students.

Pat Bosco, associate vice president and dean of student life, said the majority of the 23,151 students, a record enrollment, come to K-State driven by future job and career possibilities.

"Students that come to K-State are overwhelmingly looking to the potential job market as a resource into the decisions they make," he said. "Anytime a new top ten list for potential majors is released by the media, it seems that there are shifts slanted towards those hot jobs."

Bosco said he recalled how previously the choice of physical therapy as a major became very popular several years ago. Today the choice of physical therapy, although still popular, is not as significant.

"Television shows that prospective students are watching that emphasize specific areas like E.R. or C.S.I. have helped to also create a leaning in specific majors like criminal justice and pre-health," he said.

"In order to contain growth in specific majors, the institution has implemented grade point average restrictions in some areas of study," Bosco said. "Many majors, like journalism, architecture, business, interior design, and pre-health have come to have an expectation of at least 3.0 to continue studying in that particular field."

Bosco also said current popular areas of interest are pre-health, and, for freshman in particular, the open-option program in the College of Arts and Sciences. Eighteen percent of the most recent freshman class started in that program during its first year.

Michelle Haupt, coordinator for the academic and career information center, works with open-option students to help them plan out a future career path.

Haupt said despite the record enrollment, students tend to follow their own beliefs and values more than actual trends.

"In advising students, I would always tell them to avoid pursuing a career based on the latest trends or the potential income they may receive," Haupt said. "It is about finding a career that one can be happy with, that plays to the individual's strengths, and still provides financially for a future family."

Bosco also said many minors are popular, specifically leadership studies and business.

Court expands job protection

By Hope Yen
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – The Supreme Court expanded job protections for roughly half the nation's work force Wednesday, ruling that federal law allows people 40 and older to file age bias claims over salary and hiring even if employers never intended any harm.

The decision eases the legal threshold for about 75 million middle-aged and older people to contend in court that a policy has a disproportionately hurtful effect on them.

On the other hand, the ruling makes clear employers still will prevail if they can cite a reasonable explanation for their policies, such as cost-cutting.

The decision was applauded by advocates for older workers. Business and municipal groups expressed disappointment, saying it could create costly additional litigation.

The case was brought by older police officers in Jackson, Miss., who contended a city policy favored younger colleagues. The court unanimously rejected their appeal but in a 5-3 vote ruled they were entitled to pursue the lawsuit.

Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist did not participate in the decision, which was heard in November when he was being treated for thyroid cancer.

Justice John Paul Stevens, writing for the majority, cited the 1967 Age Discrimination in Employment Act. He said it was meant to allow the same type of legal challenges for older workers that minorities and women can make under the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

But he also said the same law stipulates employers are within their rights to sometimes treat older workers differently.

"Age ... not uncommonly has relevance to an individual's capacity to engage in certain types of employment," wrote Stevens, who at 84 is the court's oldest member.

He was joined by other members of the court's liberal wing David H. Souter, Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Stephen G. Breyer.

Justice Antonin Scalia filed a separate opinion, saying "disparate impact" claims alleging a hurtful effect are acceptable based on the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission's interpretation of the congressional statute, not the majority opinion's "independent determination" of the law.

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor and two others disagreed, saying the age discrimination act bars the impact claims. She said Congress never intended such lawsuits because employers should have flexibility to make business decisions that might unintentionally harm older workers.

"There often is a correlation between an individual's age and her ability to perform her job," O'Connor wrote. "That is to be expected, for physical ability generally declines with age, and in some cases, so does mental capacity."

She was joined by Anthony Kennedy and Clarence Thomas.

"This is a major boost for the fight to eliminate age discrimination in the workplace. Evidence that an employer is intentionally out to get older workers is very hard to come by," said Laurie McCann, senior attorney for AARP, the advocacy group for people 50 and over.

"It is a significant win for older workers who lack smoking gun evidence of age discrimination," said Thomas Goldstein, a Washington lawyer who represented the police officers. "It also reminds employers to be conscious of the effects of their policies."

Appeals court declines Schiavo intervention

By Mitch Stacy
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PINELLAS PARK, Fla. – A federal appeals court raised a flicker of hope for the parents of Terri Schiavo, but snuffed it out several hours later on Wednesday by firmly and resoundingly declining to intervene in the grueling legal battle.

"Any further action by our court or the district court would be improper," the Atlanta-based 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals wrote. "The time has come for dispassionate discharge of duty."

And in a scathing attack on politicians who got involved in the case, the court added that the White House and lawmakers "have acted in a manner demonstrably at odds with our Founding Fathers' blueprint for the governance of a free people – our Constitution."

The ruling came as Schiavo, 41, began her 13th day without food and water. The brain-damaged woman was expected to survive one to two weeks after her feeding tube was removed by court order March 18. Her husband, Michael Schiavo, insists he is carrying out her wishes by having the tube pulled.

The Schindlers' spokesman, Randall Terry, said their attorneys were preparing an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The court raised the Schindlers' hopes late Tuesday when it agreed to consider their emergency bid for a new hearing in the case. But 15 hours later, the court ruled against granting a hearing – the fourth time since last week that it ruled against the Schindlers.

The parents asked that the feeding tube be reinserted immediately "in light of the magnitude of what is at stake and the urgency of the action required."

The Schindlers' motion included arguments that the 11th Circuit in its earlier rulings did not consider whether there was enough "clear and convincing" evidence that Terri Schiavo would have chosen to die in her current condition.

To be granted, the parents' request would have needed the support of seven of the court's 12 judges. The court did not disclose the vote breakdown.

Earthquake death toll rises

By Chris Brummitt
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GUNUNG SITOLI, Indonesia – Firefighters freed a man trapped in a crumpled house on remote Nias island on Wednesday, 36 hours after he was buried in rubble. As the first foreign military help arrived, officials said an estimated 1,000 people had died in the region's latest large earthquake.

Later, a magnitude-6.3 quake was reported off the west coast of northern Sumatra, the U.S. Geological Survey in Golden, Colo., said. The quake, which occurred about 19 miles underground, was in the same region as Monday night's temblor. There were no immediate reports of a tsunami warning being issued or of any casualties or damages.

The quake, which was one of at least four aftershocks felt in the last 24 hours, was centered about 170 miles south of Banda Aceh. Residents there did not feel any shaking. The Pacific Tsunami Warning Center in Honolulu said no tsunami warning was issued.

Residents in Nias island's main town of Gunung Sitoli swarmed over collapsed buildings, searching frantically for survivors of the country's second catastrophe in three months, after December's massive quake and tsunami.

French firefighters from the agency Firefighters Without Borders – who rushed to the island from Aceh province's west coast – used a car jack to free the legs of 25-year-old television repairman Jansen Silalalahi, who had been pinned between a motorbike and a cupboard.

As he was lifted out of the rubble of what was once a three-story building, Silalalahi smiled weakly and gave a thumbs-up.

"People knew I was there but it was difficult to reach me. I kept screaming whenever I heard anyone," said Silalalahi, who did not appear to be badly injured. "I feel relief because now I am safe."

The improvised rescue highlighted the crisis situation officials face here: there are thousands of collapsed buildings and no machinery to help search the rubble for survivors.

The town's hospital was barely functioning: It lacked power or water, and it had no fuel for generators.

"We know there are many people critically injured," said Dr. Norman Peeler, a medical coordinator from the World Health Organization. "It is essential they get treatment, infections spread easily in open wounds."

Two Singaporean military helicopters landed Wednesday and distributed food and water to a frantic crowd of survivors. They also delivered a car, medical supplies, generators and 20 Singaporean troops and medics.

Senate committee endorses bill to expand state's legal gambling

By John Hanna
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA, Kan. – A bill allowing casinos in five areas and slot machines at dog and horse tracks won the endorsement of a Senate committee Wednesday, with supporters pitching it as a way to raise new dollars for education.

The bill would set aside the state's revenues from the new gambling for public schools. Supporters estimated the bill would raise $150 million during the fiscal year beginning July 1.

The Ways and Means Committee's voice vote sent the bill to the Senate for debate. It was the first significant legislative action on gambling this year.

Local officials, prospective developers and racing groups have been pushing for an expansion of legal gambling for more than a decade, but their efforts have failed. Gov. Kathleen Sebelius supports an expansion, and proponents had hoped pressure to find additional money for schools would help their efforts.

But some education officials are wary of the Senate committee's bill, quickly nicknamed "Slots for Tots," like other similar proposals in the past.

Mark Tallman, a lobbyist for the Kansas Association of School Boards, said education officials worry that if gambling revenues are dedicated to schools, legislators will stop considering education's needs, figuring they've addressed them.

The bill would permit casinos in the Dodge City, Junction City, Kansas City, Pittsburg and Wichita areas, with local voter approval.

Also, a total of 6,000 electronic slot machines would be spread among five dog and horse racing sites, including 500 each at small tracks in Greenwood and Harper counties.

The state would receive at least 24 percent of the gross revenues from the new gambling. It would own the casinos but could hire private developers to operate them.

Supporters argue the new casinos – there could be more than one within a given area, depending on what market studies show – will draw tourists to Kansas or capture dollars that Kansans are spending in casinos in Missouri and elsewhere.

CENTER | $3 million needed to fund new child development facility

studio associate professor, is leading the group of 15 students that will have a say in the new center's fate.

Pecar said her group is in an exploratory stage in which they have been busy visiting other centers, taking pictures, talking to other designers and center directors, and putting together a building program and early design stages.

Pecar's group will present their research findings on the approximate size, cost, and arrangement for the building to the task force sometime this April. The task force will have the option to incorporate the information into its May recommendation.

The studio first began research for the design in January, and will continue to plan and design for the large project for several semesters to come.

In addition to the task force, the Child Development Center has formed a separate design committee made up of faculty and parents who asked Pecar's fourth-year design studio to present their ideas and plans to them.

Pecar said that materials from the parent survey are incorporated into the preliminary program to help guide the group with important decisions.

Although parents, staff, and teachers will be included in the planning process, Pecar's design studio is taking it a step further than simply including adults.

"We want to bring children into the process to look at our model and get more ideas of what children would like in their play space. We want to make it an interactive and fun learning experience for all," Pecar said.

Toward the end of the semester Ring said she hopes to find out what the true size and location of the site will be, and then the design committee will present feedback which will be transferred to next semester's fifth-year architecture class. Then that group will come up with the final details for the design, which will be turned into a consultant upon completion.

"The consultant, who is an architect and an early child care specialist, will make suggestions and changes and we'll go from there," Ring said.

Because it is in such early development stages still, it remains uncertain as to whether or not the site will even be located on or off campus or how the process will be funded.

Ring said that since the Child Development Center is a separate project from the Jardine Redevelopment Project, the Center is on its own for the funding. However, ideas for funding are in the works.

The center's funding will need to amount to $3 million, and will likely come from bond issues, the university foundation, endowments from alumni and other grants and large fund-raising projects put on by the center.

Ring said that she anticipates a great result from the new center.

"We need to be able to say that it's state of the art and that it's actually designed for young children and families," Ring said.

SOLDIER | Soldier charged with multiple crimes could face death count of adultery, one count of conspiracy to commit murder and one count of being absent from Fort Riley while being confined to post.

The Army hasn't decided whether to pursue the death penalty for Stanley, Robinson said.

Otherwise, he could face life in military prison.

Stanley and Colvin were both with Bravo Company of 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry and had served in Iraq when the unit was deployed for the early stages of the war.

Stanley was scheduled to return for a second tour in June 2004 but was being held at the time in Pottawatomie County on eight drug charges.

Four other soldiers from the battalion have been charged for crimes in Iraq.

Two face charges over a killing in Baghdad's Shiite Muslim stronghold of Sadr City in August. Sgt. Michael P. Williams, 25, of Memphis, Tenn., and Spc. Brent May, 22, of Salem, Ohio, are charged with premeditated murder, obstruction of justice and making a false official statement.

In January, the Army convicted Staff Sgt. Cardenas J. Alban of Inglewood, Calif., of murder for the shooting of a wounded 16-year-old Iraqi as U.S. forces battled an uprising, also in Sadr City in August. Staff Sgt. Johnny M. Horne Jr., of Winston-Salem, N.C., was sentenced in December to three years in prison after pleading guilty to conspiracy in the same killing.

SCHOOLS | Funding bill sent to governor, increases aid by $116 million

the backbone to do it."

The measure passed Wednesday would increase aid to all school districts and provide additional dollars for special education, bilingual education and programs for students who are at risk of failing. It also gives school districts the authority to raise local property taxes. Those taxes could raise $485 million a year.

Critics, mostly Sebelius' fellow Democrats, said the plan would help wealthy districts, making the distribution of state aid less fair. They also said legislators ignored an admonition in the court's ruling to avoid decisions based on politics and other factors "not relevant to education."

Mark Tallman, a lobbyist for the Kansas Association of School Boards, said if the justices accept plan passed by the Legislature, "They weren't serious to start with."

Eight Republicans voted against the bill, including Rep. Tim Owens, R-Overland Park, who predicted the bill would be rejected by the court. Owens said legislators were too entrenched against raising taxes to improve education.

But, said Decker, "Everything we do up here is political. We can't get away from it."

Under the plan, the state aid to schools would increase by $116.2 million for the fiscal year beginning July 1. Negotiators inserted language to allow an additional $11 million if revenue projections for the fiscal year are favorable.

School districts would be allowed to use local property taxes to raise funding worth 27 percent of their general operating budget in the 2005-06 school year, increasing to 30 percent in 2007-08. The current cap is 25 percent.

Rep. Bruce Larkin, D-Baileyville, said the plan hurts poor districts, which cannot raise local property taxes as much as their wealthy cousins.

Seventeen districts with housing prices at or above 125 percent of the state average would be allowed to raise property taxes by an additional 5 percent. The Department of Education calculates higher property taxes would provide more money to those 17 districts than increasing state aid.

"I don't know how the wealthy districts can't be happy, because the rich got all the money," said Rep. Valdenia Winn, D-Kansas City.

for research compliance, said there are three types of threats that the Kansas Highway Patrol has to be concerned with said. There are human threats such as small pox, zoonotic threats such as anthrax, plague or tularemia and agricultural threats such as foot-and-mouth disease.

The Kansas Highway Patrol would be the first responders and would be very important if such an attack would occur, he said.

"There would be a great need to control movement where the disease was found," Jaax said. "They would also be partially responsible for containing the crime scene."

KAPSALIS | Jumper pursues engineering degree, trains for Olympics

Olympics," Kapsalis said. "I was trying for the 2004 Olympics. I was really close to the Olympic qualifying times, but there weren't enough meets before the Olympics to get my time down."

But let's back up.

Go back 10 years to a time when Kapsalis wasn't even thinking about track. Back to the place he calls home – Cyprus, an island south of Turkey.

"Well, it's different from Manhattan," Kapsalis laughed. "Just the concept, the ideas, the culture – it's all different."

Once males get out of high school in Cyprus, they are required to serve in the army.

"We have to serve two years for the army because half of our island is occupied by the Turks, who are our enemies," Kapsalis said. "There's been no war for 30 years, but we have to be ready."

Because of the army, Kapsalis could not come to K-State until the fall of 2002 when he was 20.

Eventually, Kapsalis said, he wants to move back to Cyprus and start a family.

"Track's going to finish at some point," Kapsalis said. "You never know when something's going to happen, like getting injured. That's why you need something to fall back on."

Kapsalis' plan is civil engineering, a major that demands most of his spare time.

Another important part of Kapsalis' life is girlfriend, freshman Thomaida Polydorou.

Both hail from Cyprus – and both hope to qualify for the 2008 Olympics.

Polydorou is a big fan of her significant other. When she talks about Kapsalis, her eyes light up, and she grins from ear to ear.

"He has soul," Polydorou said. "He never gives up. He has the ability to change everything when everything is going wrong."

One place Kapsalis does not plan to be taken advantage of is in the Big 12 Outdoor Championships, May 13-15, in Manhattan.

All Kapsalis can think about is redeeming himself and getting first place in the triple jump.

"I want to be a good host," Kapsalis said. "And it'd be a great birthday present to win."
